Provenance:
Al-Mrōshan, Al-Suwaydah, Syria
[Latitude/Longitude: 32.844275 / 37.19575]
Al-Mróshan consists of four long, low mounds, running roughly east-west in a flat area where the Wādī al-Gharz spreads out. These mounds create a series of "gorges" perhaps 3 m high in the wadi which is otherwise very flat and at this point hardly distinguishable from the surrounding area, the "wadi-bed" consisting of several channels approximately 30–80 cm deep and 4–10 m wide. The southerly three mounds are covered with graves and enclosures. Much of the rock is not suitable for inscribing. It was visited in 1995 by the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme and all the published texts it rediscovered came from the most northerly of the southern three mounds, and most were concentrated at its eastern end.

Al-Mróshan consists of four long, low mounds, running roughly east-west in a flat area where the Wādī al-Gharz spreads out. These mounds create a series of "gorges" perhaps 3 m high in the wadi which is otherwise very flat and at this point hardly distinguishable from the surrounding area, the "wadi-bed" consisting of several channels approximately 30–80 cm deep and 4–10 m wide. The southerly three mounds are covered with graves and enclosures. Much of the rock is not suitable for inscribing. It was visited in 1995 by the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme and all the published texts it rediscovered came from the most northerly of the southern three mounds, and most were concentrated at its eastern end.

By ḫyṯ son of ḫt son of {ʾs'mk} son of ʾs'wr son of Mlk and he pastured the valley on spring herbage which was wholesome because it was well-watered ʾs'rqt and so [grant] (abundance)

Apparatus Criticus:
C: b- ql "in scarcity" for "spring herbage"; ng' b- ry srqt "he wept because the land was watered : he was plundered [?]" for "which was wholesome because it was well-watered ʾs'rqt"

Commentary:
The verb ng' has several meanings in Safaitic. Here, it seems to refer to the quality of the pasture, compare Classical Arabic naḏa'a "to be wholesome, beneficial [food]" (Hava p. 752a). Here we would suggest it is in a circumstance clause referring to the clause r'y h- ʾḥl bql. The phrase b-ry would then give the reason it was beneficial, compare Classical Arabic ṣrįy "[in relation to plants herbage, or to trees] the state of having plentiful irrigation...." (Lane 1195c). We are unable to suggest a meaning for ʾs'rqt here.

(----)ṣ(y)b w nṣḥ (h-) dqr

---- and may the planting be well watered

Apparatus Criticus:
C: w nṣḥ l-dqr "and abundant irrigation for a garden" for "and may the planting be well watered"

Commentary:
The inscription shown on this copy is too fragmentary to allow any interpretation to be offered with confidence (see Macdonald 2009: I, 317, n. 96). If this interpretation is correct, the planting could refer either to opportunistic sowing of grain in the desert (see Macdonald 2009: I, 316–318, and n. 106). It is worth noting that this text was reputedly found at the point where the Wādī al-Gharz douches into the Ruhbah, a large alluvial plain which is the largest area in the harrah for opportunistic agriculture. Nevertheless, it should be stressed that, while this interpretation may be possible, the given problematic copy, it can be no more than a suggestion.

Commentary:
The translation offered here is based on the following. We have interpreted kry on the basis of Syriac karā "to grieve [for someone]" which can take either ʾal or ʾa-. (Sokoloff 2009: 650b). Grammatically, there is no way of telling whether the author or h-rmy is the subject of this verb, but there seems no identifiable reason why a Roman should grieve for this man’s son and so it is more likely that it was the author who was grieving. In this case h-rmy must refer to the son, ʿys¹. This does not mean, of course, that he was a Roman citizen (though depending on the date, it could be possible that he was). It is more likely that he had gone to work for the Romans, either as a soldier or in another capacity, and was called h-rmy by his family because of this. An alternative interpretation of h-rmy would be "the archer", compare Classical Arabic ṭamād "to shoot an arrow" (Lane 1161a). Either way, he was apparently in trouble and his father was worried for him.

l mʾqn bn bdḥ wʿly mg

By Mʾqn son of Bdḥ and he went up to pasture

Commentary:
With C, we have taken mg as equivalent to Arabic manğa “pasturage” (see mg in C 3235) with the assimilation of [n] as is common, though sporadic, in Safaitic. It would be in the locative (see Al-Jallad 2015: 201–202).

\{M^d(')l\} (was here) the year of much rain and he hunted on the level ground

Apparatus Criticus:
C: w syd h- gdd “and he fished in this pool”

Commentary:
For j^t compare Classical Arabic ġayt “rain over a wide area, rain that is productive of much good” (Lane 2314b). C interprets gdd from Classical Arabic ġad which he translates as “stagnant water at the edge of the desert”. However, it appears that it is actually used of “a well [rather than a pool] in a place where there is much herbage” (Lane 385c, Groom 1983: 131–132, under “Judd”) which would not be a suitable place for fishing. It should be noted, however, that fishing can certainly take place in desert pools where water has collected and has remained for several months. The Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme in 1996 saw a number of fishermen on the lake formed by the dam at Al-Namārah, and was given a fish, some 30 cms long, which one of them had caught. However, in this case, it seems more likely that gdd is to be compared to Arabic ġadad “hard, level ground” (Lane 386c).

lk’m(h) bn ---[y] bn ‘byn w whl[h] f whl ’l’ S²y’ -h f hy ’lt hyy l-ḏ s¹sr

By (K’mh) son of ---[y] son of ‘byn and (he was distraught) over and over again for his companions and so O ’lt [grant] life to him who remains

Apparatus Criticus:
C: [f][n]y for ---[y]; f h y’il hyy l-ḏ s¹sr “ and O ’Y’lt life to the one who leaves [it] unimpaired“

Commentary:
There is no justification on the copy for C’s restoration of the second name as [f][n]y. C suggests that w whl f whl could be due to dittography but this seems unlikely given the different conjunctions used. Literally it means “he was distraught and then he was distraught”, which we have translated as “he was distraught over and over again", presumably every time one or more of his companions died or was in trouble. On the vocative particle by see Al-Jallad 2015: 158–159, and for the meaning of of s¹ʾr see Al-Jallad 2015: 339–340.

Provenance:

By ʾḥlm son of ʾbdʾl son of S²ddt and he found an inscription by Mḡṯ and so he wept and was slain may he have security and so O lt [grant] security to him who remains and O lt Dṭn [inflc]t misfortune on whoever scratches out the carving

Apparatus Criticus:
C. w wḏd s²fr mḡṯ “and he found the inscriptions of Mḡṯ” for w wḏd s²fr ʾḻ mḡṯ “he found an inscription by Mḡṯ”; s²lm ʾḻ ḏ s¹ʾr “security to the one who leaves [it] unimpaired”

Commentary:
C’s reading w wḏd s²fr mḡṯ “and he found the inscriptions of Mḡṯ” is, of course, impossible. As he noted in his commentary, the -n of s²frn would be dropped in annexation. We have therefore suggested reading not n but i and to read w wḏd s²fr ʾḻ mḡṯ “he found an inscription by Mḡṯ”. In this, ʾḻ would echo the beginning of most inscriptions and in particular C 4983 (l mḡṯ bn ḫmn) which is also the only inscription by a Mḡṯ recorded in this vicinity, another reason to doubt the reading s²frn. For grz compare Classical Arabic ḡaraza-hu “he slew him” (Lane 408c), here in the passive. The expression ʾḻ-ẖ s²lm probably stands for “ʾḻ-ẖ-ḇ s²lm in which the definite article has been assimilated to the preceding 3rd person singular enclitic pronoun. Compare Arabic ‘ḻay-hi al-salām. For the meaning of of s¹ʾr see Al-Jallad 2015: 339–340. On ʾlt dṭn see Macdonald, Al Muʿazzin & Nehmé 1996: 474–476 and n. 117.

I s¹ʿd bn ḏbb bn s¹ʾd w rʾy ḥ-ʾ rmmt bql w ṣl- bnṭ w l- ʾm -h w l- ṣfnt f ḥ l ṣl m l- ḏ s¹lg

By S¹ʿd son of ḏbb son of S¹ʾd and he pastured this [region of] ancient wells on spring herbage and he grieved for a young daughter and for her mother and for ḡfnt and so ʿlt [grant] security for him who s¹lg

Apparatus Criticus:
C: l s¹ʿd bn ḏ(r) bn s¹ʾd w rʾy ḥ-ʾ rmmt b- ql w ṣl- bnṭ w l- ʾm -h w l- ṣfnt f ḥ l ṣl m l- ḏ s¹(r)

Commentary:
The letters in the copy appear clear and consistent, thus there is definite distinction between m and g, which important in the interpretation of some sections (see below). The inscription contains several unusual features. Firstly, the phrase ḥ-ʾ rmmt is probably a rare example of the demonstrative ḥ- “this” followed by definite article ʾ-, see Al-Jallad 2015: 78–79, 83. We have interpreted rmmt on the basis of Arabic harāmīt “ancient wells” (Lane 2892a) and, since rʾy is usually followed by the area pastured and/or the type of pasture, we have taken it as referring to a “[region of] ancient wells”. If we are right in taking bnṭ as “a young daughter”, the following ṭ-m -h could refer either to “his” (i.e. the author’s) mother or to her (i.e. the daughter’s) mother, i.e. the author’s wife. There is no way of deciding this. The word bnṭ could, of course, also refer simply to “a young girl”. The final word of the prayer is also problematic. The last letter can only be a g not a m, and C’s emendation to the common s¹(r), is rather drastic. We cannot find a suitable interpretation for this.

Apparatus Criticus:
C: sʾnt t(ʾ)y b- n(d)d rḥbt "in the year ---in the hills of the Rḥbt"

Commentary:
We are unable to offer an interpretation of tlyt bnyd and C’s emendation to b- n(d)d and translation as "in the hills of the Rḥbt" is inappropriate since the Ruhbah, as its name suggests, is a shallow depression not a hilly area. For the difference in Safaitic between rḥbt ("The Ruhbah") and h-rḥbt ("this rahabah") see Macdonald 1992: 23–25.

I ḍb bn s’ḥr bn (s’)ḥy bn ḥdm bn mrz w (r’y) (’)ḥl (t’y)’ f h lt q’ws’h y’wr (h–) ----

Apparatus Criticus:

C: [’]ḥḥ[ḥ] for s’ḥy; (’)ḥm for ḥdm; m[s'(ḥ)] for mrz; f ḥ lt q’ w s’[ḥ’y] [w] ‘wr l- [d ḥy] [w]r [r] (----) “and Ṣ Lt revenge and destruction and (blindness) to [him who scratches out] ----”.

Commentary:

On the copies, the first letter of (r’y) is quite different from the other examples of ṣ in the text but it is difficult to see what else it could be. The next phase, as it stands in the copy, would only be grammatical if it meant “the ʾl Ty’ pastured the camels”, which does not seem very likely, and so we have adopted C’s emendation ʿḥt (’) giving w’y ṛḥl ṭl(y)’ “he pastured the camel herds of the ʾl Ty’”. Although, in Arabic ṣḥūb is a collective or “quasi-plural” and hence is feminine, it nevertheless has a plural ḍḥbīl used of “herds of camels” (Lane 8b). It is possible that “ḥl here represents such a plural, if the emendation is correct. The copy appears to be corrupt at the end of the text. C’s attempts to read it do not make much sense and we have had to leave q’ws’h untranslated.

According to Dussaud & Macler (1903: 29 [431]) Mithnayat Wāḍī Rāğil or Dayr al-Shaʾīr was a ruined and deserted village. They found crosses on several lintels and a small place with a qiblah which had been used as a mosque. The cisterns, one of which was covered, were remarkable and there was a large birkah (reservoir) with a partially preserved staircase going down into it. In the early 1980s, when it was visited by the Jawa Epigraphic Survey which recorded a number of inscriptions there [see the MKMR texts], it was again inhabited.

l gṭm' b- dwry

By Gṭm' at Dûrā

Apparatus Criticus:
Torrey 1931: 175: l gṭm 'b dw "Of Gṭm Abi Dw";

C: l gṭm 'l dwy "By Gṭm [of] the tribe of Dwy [?]"

Commentary:
The reading here is that made by Macdonald (2005: 119–121) from the photograph by R. Bertolino. The final letter of the text is a clear y and it is separated from the w by a r, though this is rather faint on the photograph. Neither gṭm nor gṭm' have been found before in Safaitic, but compare the Arabic name ǧatāmāh used for both a man and a woman (see Lidzbarski 1902–1915, iii: 137) or the woman's name, gtmy, which has been found twice in a Palmyrene inscription (CIS ii 4604 A1 and B 3). We would suggest that the ' of gṭm, which represents /y/ in the Palmyrene script, has not yet been found in Safaitic. Additionally, it could be the hypocoristic ending, -y which, like -y, is quite common on one-word names in Palmyrene. The name in this text could be that of either a man or a woman. If our reading and interpretation are correct, this is an extremely unusual Safaitic inscription, for two reasons. Firstly, to the best of our knowledge, this is the only text in this script in which the author has identified him- or herself simply by his/her name and the fact that he/she is in a particular geographical location (though compare Ms 64). A second peculiar feature of this text would be the use of matres lectionis. Normally, Safaitic inscriptions are written entirely without vowels or medial diphthongs. However, here it is probable that the -y of the personal name represents -/y/ and, if dwry represents the name of the city, then the w must represent medial /û/. The name appears as dwr' in two texts in the Palmyrene script from the city (PAT 1085/2 and 1094/1) and the use of /y/ in the Safaitic form to represent the final sound which appears as -/i/ in Palmyrene can be paralleled by the spelling byr' (Bostra) in a Safaitic text (SIJ 78) compared with byr' in Nabataean (see Macdonald 20015: 121, n. 15). The combination of the form of the personal name and the use of matres lectionis, suggests that the author was more familiar with Aramaic orthographic conventions than with those of the Safaitic graffiti. Commentary:

Unfortunately, Torrey did not publish the two copies and a squeeze available to him, since “the drawings do not agree with each other nor with the squeeze and it is impossible to make out anything legible” (1931: 175). This is borne out by R Bertolino’s photograph on which the letters are so faint, and the surface so covered with other marks, that it is not possible to make a coherent reading.

Corpus of Safaitic inscriptions

C 5177 (Es-Ṣāliḥiye 3; Dura Europos S 3)

ṣ{w}f b{n} klb

(Sw) {son of} Klb

Apparatus Criticus:
Torrey 1931: 176, followed by C: I n(s){ryhb.

Commentary:
Torrey did not interpret the first sign and read the rest as ln(s){ryhb. However, the photograph shows a finely scratched ṣ or possibly an ḍ before the first sign copied by Torrey. It is in a different technique from the rest of the text, but it looks deliberate and there is no sign of another inscription to which it might belong. After the ṣ/ ḍ there appears to be an elongated w and this is followed by a shallow ẓ or a flying at 90° to the direction of the text. The form of the letter is clear, only its value is ambiguous. However, ẓ in this context does not seem to produce a possible name and I would therefore take the letter as f, reading the name as swf or w'f. The former has not been found before in Safaitic, but is a perfectly possible name. Compare, for example, Arabic sawwāf “a wool-merchant”. If, on the other hand, the name is ‘wf, this has been found once before in Safaitic and is presumably a diminutive of the more common name ‘f, perhaps *‘Uwayf. On the photograph the b of bn is clear and the n seems to be a dot between its arms. The next letter is not at all certain but on the photograph looks like a k, the loop to one side of the stem on Torrey’s copy being, in fact, two short bars whose ends do not appear to be joined. At first sight, the next sign looks like a h and was so copied by Torrey. However, on the photograph, the side stroke seems to be part of a long extraneous scratch below the letter, and the sign is probably a l. The last letter is probably a b. The short line transecting the curve seems, on close examination, to be extraneous. The name Klb is, of course, well-attested in Safaitic. ṣḥ[b]ḥ bn nṣs³ bn yḍr

Ṣḥḥ son of (Ns¹k) son of Ydr

Apparatus Criticus:
Torrey 1931: 176, followed by C: h-ṣʿrb w h- bḏ “the camel train and Bedouin Ḟḥ”.

Commentary:
A band of rough lime runs through centre of the letters, obscuring parts of them. We have taken the first letter as s, though the loop is barely visible on the photograph. The upper part of the second letter is very faint while the lower is very thick and touches the rather square h which follows. The b of bn is clear and seems to be followed by two dot n’s cut into the band of lime which runs through the middle of the s’s which follows. This is presumably the reason that Torrey copied it as a b, though he read it as a w. There is no sign on the photograph of the stem of the next letter which Torrey copied as a h. Instead there is a third, fainter “prong” to the left of the other two, making it a h at 90° to the direction of the text, or more likely a k. The following bn is clear and the next letter is probably a y. What at first sight appears to be part of the stem above the loop can, on closer examination, be seen to be a thinner line which is not quite joined to the letter. The lower half of the next letter does not show up well on the photograph but is consistent with it being a d, as shown on Torrey’s copy, and the final letter is different from the bs and is perhaps more likely to be a r. The first name, if we have read it correctly, is very well attested in Safaitic, and the second is also known. The third has been found only once before in this form, in ISB 58, where it is at the top end of a genealogy of eleven generations. By Sʾm son of Bgd of the lineage of Mʾgmʾ and he longed for Ḥdt and for Gbt of the patrol of Nʾm

Torrey (1932: 7–68): I sʾwʾ mʾ bn bgd Ḥ ṣʾmʾgmʾ w tsʾwq ʾĪ ṭḥtʾ ᵐ bʾṭʾ nʾm “Of Sʾm, of the Bny Bgd, passing by with a company; and he longed for Ḥdt and for Gbt; sending a greeting”;

C: I sʾwʾ mʾ bn bgd Ḥ ṣʾmʾgmʾ w tsʾwq ʾĪ ṭḥtʾ ᵐ bʾṭʾ nʾm “By Sʾm son of Bgd passing by with a company and he longed for Ḥdt and for Gbt sending a greeting”;

Jamme 1970: 88, no. 148: I sʾwʾ mʾ bn bgd ʾĪ ṣʾmʾgmʾ w tsʾwq ʾĪ ṭḥtʾ ᵐ bʾṭʾ nʾm “By Sʾm son of Bgd of the tribe of Mʾgmʾ. And he was longing for Ḥdt and for Gbt him of the tribe of Mʾgmʾ”.

Commentary:
The reading and interpretation here is that of Macdonald 2005: 124. Unfortunately R. Bertolino was unable to rediscover this inscription at Dura Europos and so we do not have a photograph of it. According to Torrey the "text runs down [the pillar] perpendicularly, then [turns] horizontally to the right... halfway around, then rises again in a perpendicular line“ (1932: 66–67). To judge from Torrey’s facsimile (copied from the squeezes) and his description, the text was well-cut and the reading of the letters seems clear. The signs for ʾī, and ṭ are well distinguished and the only letter with an unusual form is ʾl, which both Torrey and C read as ʾl, though its value is not in doubt thanks to the expression ʾĪ ʾī. The first name has been found in three other Safaitic inscriptions (JaS 160.2, KRS 1828, MAHB 3) and the second is fairly well-attested. However, the “tribal” name, mʾgmʾ; is so far unique and, at first sight, would seem to belong to the small number of names found occasionally in Safaitic which end in an ʾn which is not part of the root, e.g. “ʾn” (WH 147), qdmʾ (MST) 1, tmʾ (WH 1125), etc. In each of these cases, however, the letters before the “represent elsewhere the non-divine element in theophoric names, thus, for instance, “ʾnʾl, qdmʾ, tmʾ, etc. This is not the case, however, with mʾgmʾ, which, anyway, would not make a suitable element in such a name. At present, we can only offer an explanation of this ethnicon, Ḥdt, the first of the two names after tsʾwq ʾĪ, has not been found before. Assuming that Torrey’s facsimile is accurate, there can be no doubt about the reading. The etymology is, however, much more difficult. The second name gbt may have been found once before in Safaitic, in C 3767 though even here the reading is not entirely certain. We have taken bʾṭ as the equivalent of Arabic baʾṭ, baʾṭt and baʾṭt meaning “someone or something sent”, hence “a messenger”, or “an army, force, or patrol that is sent out” (Lan 223b). Nʾm could be a personal name, or the equivalent of Arabic naʾʾm “camels and sheep and/or goats when pasturing", or of Arabic naʾʾm “blessing, comfort, enjoyment, well-being” (Lan 3035b–c). There are thus at least three ways of interpreting the phrase. (1) bʾṭʾ nʾm could be in construct with gbt, literally “Gbt of the patrol of Nʾm”, meaning that Gbt was a member of Nʾm’s patrol; or (2) bʾṭʾ nʾm could be in apposition to gbt, i.e. meaning “Gbt, Nʾm’s messenger”; or (3) bʾṭʾ could be a participial circumstantial clause referring to gbt, followed by an adverbial accusative nʾm, thus equivalent to an Arabic baʾṭt nʾm meaning literally “sent out with regard to the pasturing animals”, i.e., “who was sent out [to look after] the pasturing animals”. Of these, we would suggest that (1) is probably the most likely.

There are many Safaitic, Greek and two Latin graffiti on the slopes of the island and the banks of the wadi. Apparatus Criticus:
CGSP 1: I ʾtrt compares the name to divine name ʾṯṛt in Qat. MCAM: read ʾtbt or if the bottom right stroke is doubtful then the second letter should be read k and the name read asʾktbtʾ MNH p. 311 n. 50: on inscriptions found within settlements.

l s²ms¹(g)rm

By (s²ms¹grm)

Apparatus Criticus:
CGSP 5:1 {lm{s¹}sm{s¹}g m "di {Fms¹} s³km dei Gm" MCAM: the last three letters should be read as a separate text; the text could be read as Hismaic "l s²ms¹grm" but the s² has the Safaitic form and it seems most likely that the third letter should be emended and either "s²ms¹grm" or "s²ms¹rm" read for the name.

Commentary:
For the last three letters read by CGSP see CGSP 5.1. It seems most likely that the text should be read as s²ms¹grm as zig-zag s²'s occasionally occur in Hismaic. See also CGSP 7.1.

Provenance:
Column 2, unspecified region, unspecified country. Pompeii

CGSP 5.1

By {Md}

Apparatus Criticus:
CGSP 5: see under CGSP 5 MCAM: read l m(d) where the has a Hismaic form.

Commentary:
The above letters are read by the edition as the end of CGSP 5. The outer curve of the m is very doubtful in the photograph and it is possible the letter should be read as a f. If the last letter is a d then second backward hook is very uncertain. It seems possible that the letter could be a y although the line is placed on the side of the loop rather than in a central position which is more usual.

By ṭsʾ son of ṭsʾm

Apparatus Criticus:
CGSP 7: the last three letters are read as the end of CGSP 7 MCAM: 1 ṭsʾ bn ṭsʾm; first part of text more lightly scratched and the third letter unclear; again it seems likely that ṭ should be read /g/ although the sʾ is a zig-zag; this however is not insuperable as zig-zag sʾ’s occur in Hismaic.

Commentary:
See under CGSP 7 for the last three letters. For the possibility that this is Hismaic see CGSP 5.

Commentary:
It looks as though the w has been added to. All that is visible of the eighth letter are two angled lines and there does not appear to enough room under the damage for a line. The letter read as a b is angular with one arm curled in a hook. The ḥ is rather uncertain as it is not entirely clear that the third line is attached to the other two. Commentary:
The first letter of the sixth name and the following n from the photograph seem to be a ḥ. lʿt could be lʿnt there is space for the n and an abrasion between the ṣ and t. There is no preposition after s¹lm and it is most likely that ḡ lʿyṣ²kr is a continuation of the genealogy rather than the indirect object of the prayer.

Commentary:
The stone was bought in Damascus. It has been missing from the museum for many years and could not be found at the time the objects in the museum were given new accession numbers. It seems possible that in the final phrase the author made a mistake and wrote _b- ṭrw_ instead of _b- ṭrh_. But this is only a suggestion. The final _r_ read by Ryckmans is not visible on the photograph. There is a thin line, but nothing crossing it, and it may well be extraneous to the inscription. The inscription is in the so-called "square script".

Apparatus Criticus:
RyDamas 5537: ’s¹lmw for ’s¹lmw

Commentary:
The inscription is carved round the edge of a shallow limestone tripod platter. There are several interesting aspects to this inscription. Firstly, it is carved by a woman, as are several of the inscriptions on stone vessels. Secondly, the spelling of the name ’s¹lmw is very unusual in Safaitic. Thirdly, the shapes of the letters s¹ and s² are strange, particularly the latter. In many of these inscriptions on stone vessels the letters appear to be a mixture of Safaitic and Hismiac forms. Here the s² is closer to Hismiac, though it is rather longer than is normal in that script, and the hook at one end is unexpected, though it occurs in the name rs² in the Hismiac inscription WTI 11. On the other hand, the first letter of the author’s name is more likely to be a ḫ (as in Safaitic) than a ḧ (as in Hismiac).

The stone is broken at the beginning. It is possible that the first letter which remains should be read as k, compare the "fork" of the k in 'bdmlk. it is also possible that y should be restored after the s² t as in AKSD. It seems likely that [ts²][wq 'l- grr "he longed for Grr" should be restored before the prayer. Apparatus Criticus:
AKSJ: w ‘l- ḥb’t bn ms’k [w ‘l- ḥb’t] bn ys’lm for w ‘l- ḥb’t bn ms’k bn ys’lm.

Commentary:
The inscription is carved on a limestone bowl with short handles at the base and (broken off) at the rim: diameter at the rim is 16 cms, at the base is 12 cms, and it is 9.5 cms high. The text is carved around the lower part of the outer face, running from the left side of the lower handle all round the bowl ending at the right side of the handle. The correct position of bn ys’lm is difficult to judge since it is carved at right angles to the rest of the text below the ḥb’t. It could either be the father of ḥb’t which the author had omitted and then added, or it could be the father of Ms’k whose name was already up against the handle, with the space immediately below possibly already occupied by AKSJ 1.5.2.

Commentary:
The inscription is carved on a limestone bowl with short handles at the base and (broken off) at the rim: diameter at the rim is 16 cms, at the base is 12 cms, and it is 9.5 cms high. The text is carved around the centre of the outer face of a stone bowl. The inscription begins to the left of the lower handle and runs immediately above Damascus Museum 21039.1, ending above the word ts’wqt in that text. Commentary:
The inscription is carved on a limestone bowl with short handles at the base and (broken off) at the rim: diameter at the rim is 16 cms, at the base is 12 cms, and it is 9.5 cms high. The inscription runs above Damascus Museum 21039.1 from the left of the lower handle to just above the name ḥbʾ in Damascus Museum 21039.1, at which point it curls upwards and runs for 4 letters in the opposite direction along the rim. This was probably to avoid bn ysʾlm of Damascus Museum 21039.1, which must therefore have been carved before the present text. Damascus Museum 21039.4 (= AKS) begins immediately after the last letter of the present inscription.

It starts at the top of the outer side of the bowl, immediately after the end of Damascus Museum 21039.3 (AKS) and runs to the right until it meets the end of Damascus Museum 21039.6 (= AKS) 1.1.1, whereupon it turns upwards.

Commentary:
The inscription is carved on a limestone bowl with short handles at the base and (broken off) at the rim: diameter at the rim is 16 cms, at the base is 12 cms, and it is 9.5 cms high. It starts immediately to the left of the broken upper handle, running above Damascus Museum 21039.2 (AKS) 1.2.1 and below the end of Damascus Museum 21039.6 (= AKS) 1.1.1. Commentary:
The inscription is carved on a limestone bowl with short handles at the base and (broken off) at the rim: diameter at the rim is 16 cms, at the base is 12 cms, and it is 9.5 cms high. The inscription runs from the right of the lower handle upwards and across the scar where the upper handle had been and along the top of the outer face of the bowl. It is thus clear that it was carved after the upper handle had broken off which suggests that it may have been treated as a "waste product" which could be used for graffiti.

Commentary:
A tracing found among Gerald Lankester Harding's papers. There is no indication of its provenance. For the interpretation of 'mt compare Classical Arabic amata "he directed his course to" (Lane 95c) and for s²r compare Classical Arabic ša'ār "luxuriant or abundant or dense trees" or šiʿār "trees in a land that is soft and depressed between two eminences where people alight, such as is termed dahmā and the like, warming themselves thereby in winter and shading themselves thereby in summer" (Lane 1561a). Otherwise 'mt might be interpreted on the basis of Arabic amata "he calculated (Lane 94c) and h-s²r as al-šiʿār "Sirius", the star dominating the very hottest part of the season of qūz which is followed by Suhayl the harbinger of the October rains. The antepenultimate letter could be f.

*l bny bn bny bn '{}'{s¹}d w fks¹ h- nz(r) *

By Bny son of Bny son of {'s¹}d and he fks¹ the {one on the look-out}

Commentary:
The sentence following the genealogy is increasingly difficult to interpret. The root fks¹ does not occur in Semitic, Arabic fqs¹, for which a b-form fqs is also attested, means "to die" or "to break". The irregular correspondence between emphatic and emphatic consonants across Semitic languages is not unknown and, since fks¹ does not occur anywhere else, we can tentatively connect it with Arabic fqs. The existence of an irregular bi-form in Arabic may support our connection. The last letter of the following word should be restored as an r, since there are no roots with n as C1 and ḡ as C2. This produces a rather curious translation: "and he killed the one on the look-out". Another interpretation maintains the connection between Safaitic fks¹ and Arabic qfs, but parses the following word as hn- zr. Zr can be connected to Arabic žirr 'flint', in which case, we would translate the sentence as: "and he broke (struck?) the flint". This translation requires us to assume that the author of this text spoke a hn- dialect. Statistically speaking this is unlikely since the vast majority of texts exhibit only h-, but given that the Arabic 'l occurs, as well as the assimilating article, '-, we cannot completely rule out the possibility of a hn- dialect in this region as well.

* l ṣ¹ḏ bn ṣ¹g bn ṣ¹lm w ṣr h- ṣ²n m- ʿl- ṣ¹{l}y

By ṣ¹d son of ṣ¹g son of ṣ¹lm and he lay in wait for enemies from above ṣ¹{l}y

Commentary:
The final prepositional phrase lends itself to several interpretations: (1) The wood 'asal in Arabic can mean "brush (plant)" or "palm thorn". If we take ṣ¹{l}y here to mean the same thing, then the author was perhaps waiting, camouflaged by the brush. Perhaps ṣ¹{l}y is a plural form, *ʿasʿliyā or a fuʿlay patter, *ʿuslay. (2) Through metaphorical extension, the word 'asal can also signify a lance(s). Arabic rimāḥ. If we understand the Safaitic word in this way, then we have a few options for translation: a. We can take ṣ¹{l}y as a lancer, with the nisba -y, and the author could be lying in wait above him: m- ʿl- ṣ¹{l}y "above a lancer". We can also translate ṣ¹{l}y as a "lancer regiment", producing: "and he lay in wait for enemies above a lancer regiment" b. We can assume that this is an ḥ dialect rather than a h- dialect and parse the sentence as m- ṣ¹{l}y, "he lay in wait for enemies with the lancer" or perhaps "with the lance". c. We can treat ṣ¹{l}y as a toponym, perhaps a component of ṣ¹{l}y "the ṣ¹l heights". The word ṣ¹{l} occurs in a familiar toponym in Saudi Arabia, west of Riyadh, maʿsal. In this case, we have "he lay in wait for enemies from atop ṣ¹ly or from ṣ¹l heights C. The l of this word has a bit of damage in the middle that resembles an attempt at a loop. It is possible that the author intended a d, erred, and did not bother redoing it. If we restore a d here, we produce ṣ¹{l}y, which, among other things, could mean two or more (military) troops, following the meaning of ṣ¹d in OSA. Less likely, it could mean two lions. In this case, we can translate: "he lay in wait for enemies above two troops".

Commentary:
The root bhl occurs in OSA and Ethiopic meaning "to speak", which hardly fits the context of this inscription.
Arabic bahala means "to pronounce a curse" and the Gt stem ibtahala "to beseech, implore"; Akkadian baʾalu also means "to beseech or pray". In NWS, the root means "to frighten," Hebrew nibhāl "be frightened"; Aramaic bihel "frighten". The NWS "be frightened" and Akkadian "pray" fit the context of this inscription best but we are unable to determine which one is to be preferred.

The editio princeps connects ḡl with Arabic ḡillah, which is given as a synonym for camels in the Lisān al-ʿarab. It is also possible to connect this word with Arabic ḍalla, “greatness”, “of high rank”, and translate the narrative as: "and he lay in wait at the look-out for enemies courageously." The editio princeps has mistakenly cropped the photo, so that only half of a line is apparent.

By Nʾm son (Kbr) son of ḡbb ---- (f) the booty

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 15: "dry" for "(k)b(r)", dbr or dbb for (k)b(r)
Commentary:
It is possible the letter read as a f should be read as a s². The space between ḥbb and {f} does not appear to be large enough to permit a verb, but the author could have squeezed it in. The h following {f} could be one of two things: (1) a 3ms clitic pronoun, "PN, Verb-him booty" or (2) the definite article/demonstrative, yielding "PN VERBed the/this booty." The absence of a deity name tips the scale slightly in favor of the latter interpretation.

HaNSB 16 (HaNS 16)

---- w ʿgzt h· sʾmy ḱl h· sʾnt

---- and the sky was unable [to produce rain] this entire year

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 16: translation "the sky did not produce rain this entire year" (lam tamṭur al-samāʾu kullu hādihi ʿl-sanah).

Commentary:
In Arabic, as in other Semitic languages, the quantifier kull, when followed by a definite singular noun, can refer to the entirety of a category or span of time, kulu ʿl-nāsi "all mankind"; kulu ʿl-yawmi "the whole day" (Wright, Grammar of the Arabic Language, vol. 2, §§82.c,d). Thus, it is equally possible to read the h· as h·, that is, as a definite article, in this context. Either way, the semantic difference, if there really is one, would be negligible.

* l šrmt bn qds¹ w tdym ntl

By Šrmt son of Qds¹ and he was always on the move

HaNSB 56: translation "and he drank water [which was stored in] the ostrich eggs" (wa šariba 'l-māʿa (allaḏī ḥuzzina fi) bayḍiʿ 'l-nāʿāmī).

Commentary:
Tdym could more plausibly be connected to Arabic dāma "to remain, persist," with the regular confusion of w and y in weak roots, which would equate it with Classical Arabic dāʾim-an 'always'. This seems more natural than the translation proposed by the edition, "to drink rain-water that was produced by a storm without thunder and lightenings." The primary sense of ntl in Arabic is to "advance, move forward, make progress," equivalent to taṣqadam. HaNSB appeals to a secondary usage of this term which refers specifically to an ostrich egg that has been filled with water and buried in the wilderness.

HaNSB 119 (HaNS 119)

*i dʾl bn 'zn w 'gz h· s¹my

By Dʾl son of 'z and the sky withheld [it i.e. the rain]

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 119: "and the rain did not come down" (wa lam yanzil al-maṭar).

Commentary:
The masculine concord between the verb and the subject h· s¹my in this inscription vs. feminine concord in HaNSB 62 (*gz h· s¹my) invites comparison with the double gender (masc/fem) of the Classical Arabic cognate samāʾ. Alternatively, Saf s¹my could represent a singular and a plural form which were distinguished only by their vocalizations. It is worth comparing this expression with s¹nt hgz·h bʾls¹mn in C 1240, 3261 (= Mu 93), LP 722, H 506, which seems to mean "the year Bʾls¹mn withheld it [i.e. the rain]".

We connect ṣḥṭ to Arabic ṣūfāḥ pl. ṣūfāḥāt "camels with large humps" or, it could possibly be a sound plural of ṣāḥī "camel, ewe, or goat whose milk is drying up" (Lane 1696a). This translation is supported by the fact that the inscription appears along with an drawing of a camel.

Commentary:

Safaitic grzd could be compared with Classical Arabic ġaraza-hu, infinitive ġarz: "he cut it; or cut it off" (Lane 408c), hence "separation". Br could be compared with Arabic bar'ī'a min, infinitive bur'; "he was free from", rendered idiomatically here as "protection from" (Lane 178a).

suggesting a connection between the two. Thus, we in number, became abundant'. The preformative intransitive pattern faʿila, attributed to the "ʿarab": ʾamira banū fulān, ayy ka hanāʾ. We favor the latter reading, as it is unlikely that the author paused to write this inscription in the process of tracking an animal. One is tempted to read the suffix conjugation as a past imperfect "and he was tracking", but the continuous aspect is not attested for the suffix conjugation in any Semitic language. More evidence is therefore required to posit such a development in Safaitic.

Commentary:
The word qṣṣ can be interpreted in two ways. The first is as a verb in the suffix conjugation, producing the preterite "and he tracked", and the second is as an active participle *qāṣṣ or qīṣṣās (D-stem), "and he is tracking." We favor the latter reading, as it is unlikely that the author paused to write this inscription in the process of tracking an animal. One is tempted to read the suffix conjugation as a past imperfect "and he was tracking", but the continuous aspect is not attested for the suffix conjugation in any Semitic language. More evidence is therefore required to posit such a development in Safaitic.

I ʾsʾd qdy w tʾmr h-ṣʾḥs f h dsʾr hnʾt
By ʾSʾd son of Qdy and want of milk was widespread so O Dʾsʾr [grant] well-being

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 158: translation "and his fat cattle became abundant so O Dʾsʾr [grant him] well-being" (wa ʾkaṭurat māšīyatuhu l-sāminah, fa-yā ḍaʾ l-šārī (ʾamnīl-hu) l-hānāʾ.

Commentary:
tʾmr h-ṣʾḥs The noun sʾḥṣ appears relatively frequently in Safaitic with the meaning "dearth of milk, want of milk" and, on this basis, HaNSB’s translation as "fat" cannot be accepted. The root tʾmr is common Semitic, but its sense varies from language to language. In Akkadian, it means "to see", in Hebrew "to speak", and in Arabic, most commonly "to command". The Lisān, however, records an interesting marginal usage, with the intransitive pattern ʾaʿilā, attributed to the "ʿarab": ʾamira banū fulān, ʾāyya kāṭūʾ ʾr ʾBanū Fulān increased in number, became abundant’. The preformative t- in the Safaitic verb indicates that it too is intransitive, suggesting a connection between the two. Thus, we translate tʾmr as "become abundant or widespread", like HaNSB, but h- sḥṣ as "want of milk" with the generic article.

By Ṣnm son of Ṭṣrm son of Mlk and he found the inscription of ʿṢb and so he suffered and he remained in (a state of perpetual sorrow and O Bʾls⁴ mn and O Lt [grant] blood-money [vengeance] to those who remain

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 170: translation of w ẓll m ẓl s¹⁵ “and he built a shelter over one who remained sick” (wa banā ẓallah ʿalā man baqiya marīḍan)

Commentary:
In Classical Arabic the root sʾr means “to remain” in the sense of “to be left over” (as of food after a meal, or change after a purchase). However, the active participle, sʾjr “the rest, the remainder” is also used of people (Lane 1282 c). In contexts where sʾr refers to the inscription (usually in opposition to ʿwr) it means “to leave untouched” but in contexts where it refers to people it means “remain”. LP 305’s “remain safe” is stretching the meaning slightly, but the reference is in contrast to ẓlln “those who are lost, i.e. dead”. The root ẓll should be connected to Arabic "to stay, remain". We take mzl as an adverb "perpetually" (as in WH 180), and connect s¹ʾ to Arabic s¹āʾ "to be bad, sad".

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 190: translation of w tw[r] h-ṣḥf "and returned to the side of the mountain (waʿāda ʿillā) ṣafḥ al-jabal"

Commentary:
Safaitic twr could be connected with Arabic tāra, Lane 322b: "it ran or flowed”; tawwarahu "he returned to him, it, time after time”; ʿatāra - "he repeated it or did it again time after time". From other inscriptions, it seems best to connect Safaitic ṣḥf specifically with the Arabic ṣuffā, pl ṣuffāt “camels whose humps have become large, so that the hump of the she-camel occupies the whole of her back” Lane 1696a, or “a she-camel, ewe or she-goat whose milk is going away: or a she-camel that has lost her young one, whose milk has gone”, Lane 1696a-b. The second r does not have hooks.

l hn b n wrd bn s²ḥytn bn s’s w s²rq m-ḥrn b- ’bl-h s²r b- r’y y’m(r) f h b’lds mn ġyrt w s¹lm w ‘wr m ‘wr

By Hn’ son of Wr’d son of s’s and he migrated to the inner desert from the Ḥrn with his camels to the herbage at the pools of Y’mr and so 牋B’ls’mn [grant] abundance and security and blind whoever scratches out [the inscription]

Apparatus Criticus:

HaNS 197: trans. w’s²rq m-ḥrn b- ’bl-h s²r b- r’y y’m(r) "and he faced east from Hawrān on his camel (moving away from) the snow storms and the abundant rains when he saw y’mr"

Commentary:

The sentence w’s²rq m-ḥrn b- ’bl-h s²r b- r’y y’m(r) requires further discussion. Littmann (LP pp. 116–117) points out that this word frequently appears before names of places, which leads him to connect it with the root RWY "to water." If this is correct, than the Safaitic form, r’y, reflects an active participial derivation, perhaps rā’iyV (cf. Arabic QWL "to speak" qā‘īl). The intransitive verb rawiya (<r‘awiyya) means "be watered" in Gā‘az (Leslau 1987:478). The active participle of the intransitive verb *rawiya, rā‘iy, would literally mean "being watered", presumably referring to the area. The pattern CāCiC is used in the derivation of some toponyms in Arabic, šāṭ’ "coast", or sāḥil. Alternatively, one can connect this word to with the root RY "to see," and assume that it refers to a looking point. Our translation also requires a preposition, *l, following ‘bl, which is seemingly missing form the text. The solution to this problem could provide more evidence for the absence of final short vowels in Safaitic. First, we would re-parse this phrase as: s²rq m-ḥrn b-’bl h-s²r, with the h s as the definite article of s²r rather than a 3ms suffix pronoun. The article is often omitted in phrases containing the verb *s²rq (ex. NST 5: w’s²rq b-d’n f h gd ‘wd s¹lm), even when the sense is clearly definite; we argue that the word ‘bl here follows the same pattern. Next, one should recall that HaNSB attests sandhi at word boundaries, with the assimilation of the 3ms-h and a following definite article, l-ḥh y’tlah ha-hayyāt. In principle, a word final l- should assimilate to a word initial l-, in the same way, and this is likely the reason for the curious absence of the preposition. With these changes, we have: w’s²rq m-ḥrn b- ’bl h-s²r b- r’y y’m(r) *wa ‘as’raiq mī-ḥrn bi-’libl-li ha-s²a’ār bi-rā‘iyV y’mr And he migrated to the inner desert from Ḥrn to the herbage at the pools of Y’mr

Commentary:
The penultimate letter of the fifth name is more like a b than a r. We connect Safaitic ngs² to Arabic nāǧaša "he collected together [camels etc.] after a state of dispersion"; "he drove vehemently" Lane 2771 b. Ngm occurs as a place name in CSA 2.1, SIJ 997, WH 3053. The etymology of Safaitic ngm is probably connected with Arabic nāǧm "herbage", Lisān: al-nāǧm min al-nabāt: kull mā nabataʾalā waḡh ʾl-ʾard (the nāǧm of plants; all that which has grown on the face of the earth).

Commentary:
The second letter of the first name and the third letter of the fifth name are similar in shape, both are a curve with a short hook and a longer hook extended beyond the back of the curve at the other end. It would be unusual to have k's of this shape and it seems most likely that in the first case the author has for some reason extended one arm of a letter r and in the second case the copyist has made a mistake by giving the letter a second shorter arm where if the letter is a k there is usually no arm at all. The copy of the second letter of the fifth name has indications that there might be an elongated loop attached to the line. There is shading over the z and y of the word which according to the commentary have been damaged are restored on the basis of the context.

l lhb bn dh(l) (h-) bkrttn

By Lhb son of {Dḥnn} are the two young she-camels

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 264: dh(l) for dh(n)(n)

Commentary:
The last two letters of the second name are rather long and it is possible they should be read as l's. The second l of dh(l) should probably be taken as an h. The copyist may have missed the side-stroke. The author of this text likely added another camel to the original drawing of HaNSB 263, and claimed ownership of them both.

l qdm bn tbn w r’y h- nihil rtt

By Qdm son of Tbn and he pastured the valley Rtt

Apparatus Criticus:

HaNS 273: translation of rtt "he was ill, weak" (huwa marîḍ aw ḏa‘īf al-quwwah).

Commentary:
The inscription is surrounded by a cartouche. The edition’s interpretation of rtt as a verb is unlikely as we would expect a conjunction before it. It is more likely that it is the name of a particular valley, perhaps connected to the root WRṬ "to inherit", the maṣdar of which might have been ṭijat, similar to sinah “slumber” from the root WŠL and ṣifah "description, adjective" from the root WŠF.

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 287: ʿ[l]y for ṣy

Commentary:
There is no justification from the copy for the restoration of the patronym as ṣy in HaNSB. The last part of the inscription is very doubtful. The l, second h, second n, and the line of the q are all written in thinner strokes than the other letters of the inscription. There is, however, a drawing of a camel accompanying this inscription, suggesting that the translation is correct. The absence of the article on nqṭ is likely due to assimilation, see the commentary of HaNSB 39.

Apparatus Criticus:

HaNS 303: Translation of narrative "and he arrived from Ngd or from Gd" (wa waṣala min naqṣ aw min ḡad).
Commentary:
Ngd occurs in other Safaitic texts and that a journey from Najd (now in Saudi Arabia) to the ḥarrā of north-eastern Jordan was perfectly possible. MCAM points out that specific regions such as "The Rubbah" (modern al-ruhhah), "The Hawrān" (modern al-hawrān), and the inner desert (mdbr) do not take the definite article in Safaitic (rhbt, ḥrn, mdbr), hence one might expect the region called "The Nejd" to appear as ngd in Safaitic, and "high ground" to be h- ngd just as h/ rhbt refers to any shallow depression where water collects and the herbage is rich, rather than the region called Rhbt (modern al-Rubbah) North Arabian Epigraphic Notes — 1" (Arabian Archaeology and Epigraphy 3, 1992: 23–43).

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 304: w ḥf l- s¹lh h- m- nbṭ for w ḥf l- s¹lh -h m- l nbṭ; translation: "and he cast his spear and he struck with his sword and he penetrated all of his armor, so O Gḍʾ d, [grant] booty and security in compensation for whosoever saved water from the wells" (wa rāmā bi-ṛumḥ-hi ʿawrān wa ṣayf-hi fa-marqa (min) kull durʾ-hi, fa-yā Gḍʾwḏ ẓānīmah wa saḥān, wa ṣaqī li-man naqā maʾan mina l-ʾābah, wa ṣāḥī li-ilāy yattalīf (al-naqā)."

Commentary:
Safaitic rmy is certainly connected to Arabic rāmā "to throw." Unlike Arabic, however, its direct object, rmḥ (=Arabic ruḥm "lance, spear"), is introduced with b-. The words ḥzr does not have any similar Semitic cognates, but from the context, its meaning "to strike" is rather clear. Likewise, mrq does not find a clear Arabic cognate (there it means "to let pass"). It could be read as "break" from the context; indeed, the other two occurrences of s¹ls¹l in Safaitic (KRS 1023; KRS 1039) are accompanied by the word ksʾr "to break" (cf. Arabic kasara). On the other hand, one can connect it to Syriac maraq "rub off rust", which is also used metaphorically to mean "to purify." In this case, the author might have intended a rather poetic statement, "and he was purified of his bonds." Safaitic s¹lh is connected to the same root in Arabic meaning "weapon" sīlāh. If the author was referring to the two aforementioned weapons, it should be read as a dual in the construct state, which would not be reflected in the orthography: *s¹lḥay-hu "his two weapons." On the other hand, the author might have been carrying more weapons, which were confiscated from him and not mentioned in the inscription. In this case, s¹lh would represent an internal plural, perhaps similar to aslūḥ, which is a variant plural of s¹lūḥ in Arabic. Safaitic ḥlf is connected to Arabic ḥalāf "compensation" (Lane 796b). In this case, Safaitic ḥalāfa min would be meaningful from rather than compensation for, as it does in Arabic. It is also worth noting that the D-stem (form II) and C-stem (form IV) of this root are used in prayers to God to give someone something to replace something that has been lost, thus: ḥalāfa lāhu lā-kā bi-hayrin and ḥalāfa la-kā ḥayrān "May God give you good in the place of that which has gone from thee" and ḥalāfa lāhu lā-kā māla-kā "May God replace to thee thy property" (Lane 792c). Note also that in Bedouin dialects of central Arabia ṭaḥallaf bi- means "to take as compensation for a loss" (S.A. Sowayan, The Arabic Oral Historical Narrative: An Ethnographic and Linguistic Analysis (Wiesbaden, 1992: 384).

There appears to be a stray ' at the end of this text which we have excised, since it is clear that the lineage group is fr̥̄̄ as in 307. It is not read by the edition either. The author of 308 was probably a first

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 310: l s¹ʿdlh w l- h ʾfrs¹ w l- l- h ʾbkrt; trans. wa lahu ʾarfūs wa lahu ʾabkār.

Commentary:
It seems most likely that the ʾ is a form of the article and not part of a plural form. There is only one horse in the drawing and although there are two camels if they were both mentioned then it is most likely that the dual form would have been used. In addition ʾbkrt would be an unlikely plural form for the noun bkrt. This provides unambiguous evidence for an ʾ article, rather than ʾl with assimilation of the coda to coronals. An invariable ʾ article occurs in some contemporary dialects of Arabic in the Yemen. For other examples of the use of ʾ for the definite article see HaNSB 312-313, 315-316. Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 314: translation of end "and he arrived (at the place) and his camel was thirsty" (waṣala (al-makān) wa qadʾ atasāt bakaratuhu).

Commentary:
The preposition bi⁻ is taken as an instrumental, 'ty b⁻ "he came by means of". Gender concord between subject and verb is well attested in Safaitic and there are no examples yet of feminine singular concord with an inanimate plural. Either way, such an alignment cannot explain the masculine singular concord of the verb lwb with a feminine singular subject, bkrt. It is more likely that the verb here refers to the author and the preposition b⁻ is not reflected in the orthography, for the same reasons outlined in the commentary of HaNSB 197 and HaNSB 39. Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 334: Translation "and the flash-flood cut across" (wa ijtāzā (qataʿa) as-sayl).

Commentary:
The final character has one horizontal arm. Safaitic nsʾt could be connected with Arabic naṣāta meaning "to go from place to place", which when applied to water courses means "going forth from the main water course to right and left" (Lane 2797a, s.v. nāṣīt).

l ṣnn bn rfʾt bn ywhd bn ′mr bn qn w nga m- ḥrn mks¹

By Ṣnn son of Ṣnt son of Ywhd son of ′mr son of Qn and he escaped from Ḥrn wounded

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 344: ṣwdy for yhw; mn for m; Translation of nga m- ḥrn mn ks¹ “and he escaped from the Ḥawrān from the illness which afflicts the udder of the ewe” (wa naǧā ḥārībān min Ḥawrān min dāʾ ʾl-kasa’).

Commentary:
The order of the letters suggests that the third name should be read yhw. There is no n after the third m in the copy. We take mks¹ as a passive D-participle. The Arabic root ks¹ signifies a kind of striking with the hand or foot on the rear of a man. This is obviously the result of semantic narrowing and it is reasonable to posit that the term referred more generally to hitting in former times.

$l mdʾ$ bn $bnll$ bn $ʾs¹lm$ w $ḡzz$ b- ‘bl

By Mdʾ son of Bnll son of ‘s¹lm and he was on a raid at Abila

Commentary:
There is a cartouche surrounding this inscription and HaNS 347-348 and 350. ‘bl here most likely refers to the city of Abila and its territory. C 2473 [Dn 82] reads I N w ‘hmd ‘bl f rdf m gl’d which I would translate as “and he stayed [see Lane 2900a] in Abila and then returned from Gilead.” For Abila see Annual of the Department of Antiquities of Jordan 41, 1997: 303. Gilead stretched from the Arnon in the south to Bashan in the north, and bordered on the desert on its east, (see for instance the Anchor Bible Dictionary (New York, 1992: iii, 1020 s.v. Gilead). Gilead is also mentioned in KRS 15.

Apparatus Criticus:

HaNS 352: translation of prayer: ... from Hgr [tribe], the enemy (ʾmin ḡr, al-ʾaduwwah).

Commentary:

There is a cartouche surrounding the inscription. Safaitic ḡr can be connected with OSA ḡr "city"; Gaʾaz ḡagar "region, city, village, homeland, etc" (Leslau 1987:216). The exact sense of the word is not clear from the context so we have chosen the neutral term "territory". It is also possible to read the word as an internal plural, "territories".

Commentary:
There is a dot in the copy between the s² and r of the second divine name and it is possible that it is extraneous and the name should be read as ds²r however the same letters occur in HaNS 363 where the reading is clear on the photograph. Both texts have zig-zag s²’s and should probably be classed as "Mixed" although in this inscription there are no other diagnostic letters. Commentary:

HaNSB omits the patronym and the third letter from the end, which is a short dash, and reverses the order of the last letters. The Lisān explains that the root nṣ' refers to the purest state of all things (al-ḥālis min kulli šay'). When used concerning humans, it means "to show one's true self", usually referring to enmity.

(mutanaqīlan min makān lā makān).

Commentary:

HaNSC takes nwy as a circumstantial accusative introduced by the definite article. This seems unlikely, as circumstantial accusatives may be defined by a pronominal suffix but never the article. It is possible that the -h could be read as a 3rd person pronominal suffix, "he pastured it/them", without an expressed antecedent. The antecedent would have been obvious to the author, who might not have felt the need to write out explicitly what or where he was pasturing. This is in line with the syntax of similar inscriptions, e.g.: KRS 2526: \( w r'y h - r'd w KRS 2568: w r'y h - 'l h - s'q n w y \) If the author was referring to his animals, it would imply that non-human plurals took feminine singular concord, at least with pronouns. The edition connects Safaitic twf to the Arabic noun tūfān "torrential rains", but it is equally possible to appeal to the general sense of the root TWF "to go around, circumambulate" and translate the word as "[safe] return." Until more examples are attested, it will remain unclear as to which sense is to be preferred.

Safaitic mny is cognate with Arabic manan "fate, death". The translation "death" may be too precise, and we have no evidence that the author was mortally injured or ill. Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSC: Translation of h- tmny "the Teymanite" (al-taymâniyy)

Commentary:
The nisba tmny occurs once in LP 1195. The edition connects it to the city of Taymâ', and translates it as "the Teymanite". One could also connect the nisba to Timan, "the distant regions of Yemen." The Lîsân states the following: and if their origins were the Tîman (the distant regions of Yemen), then they said tîmaniyy (wa idā nasabū ila l-timan ('uluq al-yaman), la qâlū tîmaniyy). Thus, the nisba tmny could also be translated as "the Yemenite".

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSC: sʿd ṭld rʾy for sʿd -h ṭld wʾkl -h ṭld rʾy; translation: "so help, O ṭld, and he eat dates and pastured herbage which was of varying lengths" (fa-sāʾid yā ruḍā wa akala al-rad w raʾā baqlan nātilan)

Commentary:
See HaNSB 56 on the translation of ntl. Incidentally, HaNSB, the same author as this edition, translates the ntl there as "an ostrich egg which has been filled with water and buried in the desert". Safaitic ʿkl is best read as an optative of the causative verb, Arabic ʾakkala "to feed, nourish", followed by a 3ms suffixed pronoun and the name of the deity ṭld again. The conjunction w is missing following the second ṭld and rʾy, but this is probably the result of word boundary sandhi, which has already been attested with h, l, and b. The underlying form is likely: "waʾ akkil-hu ruḍaw-wa rʾy bql... There is an empty space between the first h and the third b on the copy.

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSC 9: rʾy h- ntl for rʾy -h ntl "he pastured the natl" (raʾāʾ l-natl)

Commentary:
HaNSC 9 appeals to the phrase in the Lisān: tanātala ʾl-nabat "(the plants) became entangled and some parts were longer than others" (илтафа wa sāra baʾdahu atwal min baʾdhiḥ). Obviously, the word tanātala refers to the way in which the plants have grown rather than the plants themselves so there is no way to justify the edition’s translation of ntl as herbage. It might be better to take ntl as a circumstantial accusative (see the previous inscription), and -h as a 3 person pronoun referring either to the area or the animals the author pastured. Commentary:

Safaitic qnt could be connected with Arabic qunūt “despair” The translation of wld as the past tense “gave birth” by the edition is unlikely as one would have to assume that a feminine singular or plural antecedent took masculine concord with the verb. There are two better ways of interpret both wld and qtn. One could take them as imperatives of the D-stem, wallid “cause to give birth” and qaṭṭin “cause to despair”, or as verbal nouns in construct with their direct objects.

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSC 30: Translation of frs† "horseman" (fāris) for "horse(man)"

Commentary:
This inscription appears to the right of HaNSC 29, the text of which separates it from the horse. The author of this inscription appears to be claiming authorship of the horse which HaNSC had drawn. A crude drawing of what appears to be a man accompanies this inscription.

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSC 31: ‘sʿmnt for {sʿ}mnt; translation of trḥ rjam mnḥ "he died unwillingly" (māta kārihan al-mawt)

Commentary:
Safaitic grb is probably related to Arabic ġarah "scabies" or it could perhaps be the verbal noun of ġariba "to become mangy; to have scabies". Safaitic gʿ is surely connected with Arabic ġawʿ "hunger, starvation".

l tm bn šrmt d- [']l 'mrt w rʾy ḍrk w 'lt w ds²r ḡnyt

By Tm son of Šrmt of the lineage of 'mrt and he pastured suffering from scarcity and Lt and Ds²r let there be abundance

Apparatus Criticus:
Hayajneh 2011: rʾy ḍrk "and he pastured ḍrk [place name]"
Al-Jallad Blog (http://aljallad.nl/blog/): rʾy ḍrk "and he pastured suffering from scarcity"

Commentary:
Carved in the Safaitic square script and boustrophedon in which line 1 runs from right-to-left and line 2 runs left-to-right but with the letters facing left. Note the Hismaic form of the ḍ. Here we have followed Al-Jallad’s interpretation of ḍrk (cf. Classical Arabic daruka "to be struck by misfortune", darik "poor, hungry") taking ḍrk as an accusative of circumstance, thus /Raʾaya darika/ "he pastured suffering from scarcity". This fits well with the prayer for "abundance"

l hnʾ bn ’qrʾ bn hnʾ bn ḥyr w ḍ- ṭgm

By Hnʾ son of ’qrʾ son of ḥyr and the cairn

Apparatus Criticus:
MNH p. 383 n. 481: on ways of expressing grave-markers. l N bn/bnt N etc. w ḍ- ṭgm "By N son/daughter N and the cairn [is his/hers]."
Commentary:
The letters y r and w have been scored over. The text is by the same author and says the same as HCH 2. The text is written in an arc following the upper edge of the face with a line running beneath it beginning under the lam auctoris and ending under the m of rgm. Within the curve of this line is an apotropaic sign of seven lines. HCH 1 was almost certainly the first text to be inscribed on this face since it occupies the best area and the other inscriptions are fitted in around it.

MNH p. 383 n. 481: on ways of expressing grave-markers. l N bn/bnt N etc. w h-rgm - By N son/daughter N and the cairn [is his]. n. 483.

Commentary:
The text is the same as HCH 1. HCH 2 and 9 are enclosed within a cartouche and are separated from each other by a thinly scratched line. On the back of the stone there are some crudely hammered signs which may be wusºm or simply doodles.

l hrs¹ bn 'qrb bn hn' bn hyr w bny ]['][ l- 'ḥ -h tr[h]

By Hrs¹ son of 'qrb son of Hn' son of Hyr and he built for his brother {untimely dead}

Apparatus Criticus:
HCH: trḥ for tr[h]; the word is omitted from the copy on fig.3.

Commentary:
The author originally wrote an ḫ after bny presumably as the first letter of ḥ -h and then realizing that he had omitted 'l- continued the text above the y. He then drew the line of the cartouche through the ḫ in an attempt to erase it. He also appears to have written the first two letters of tr[h] at the end of the inscription but may have left the word incomplete. There is certainly no sign of the ḥ on the photograph and the r is at the very apex of the cartouche.

By Zbd son of Ḥmy and he built (for) his maternal uncle (untimely dead)

Apparatus Criticus:
HCH: ‘l- for (‘){l-} and trḥ for tr{ḥ}.

Commentary:
The first ‘l- and the h of trḥ have been hammered over. Immediately after ḫl -h the author wrote an I by mistake and then wrote the ’ of the second ‘l- touching it. 1 'ṭ(b)h bn

By ('thh) son of

Apparatus Criticus:
HCH: 1 ---ḥ bn for 'ṭ(b)h bn and takes this inscription as the beginning of HCH 34. JMAA XIII p. 193: ‘ṭrh for 'ṭ(b)h; translation of bn "He stopped [here]".

Commentary:
The text has been scored over and is unfinished. [The mark which makes the r appear as a h on the photograph is purely superficial and is part of the over-scoring as is that which makes the l look like a h or even a b.] The middle stroke of the fourth letter is not as deep as the rest and is probably part of the subsequent scratching. The letter is most likely a h and not r as suggested by JMAA XIII as the letter does not have distinct arms which is quite a feature of r’s in these texts. The letter before h is probably h as the stroke forming the prong seems to be as deep as the vertical line of the letter. There is a further shallower stroke which is extraneous to the reading of the letter.

l zbdy bn s²ms'y w wgm 'l- hmr trh w 'l- 'bdy mqtlf h lt w h ds²r tv'r {fl} mn ḫwlt

By Zbdy son of S²msy and he grieved for Hn' untimely dead and for 'bdy who was killed. So O Lt and Ds²r [grant] vengeance from ḫwlt

Apparatus Criticus:
JSaN 36 p. 46: hmsk for s²ms'y 'lt for h lt tv'r mḥwlt for tv'r lmn ḫwlt. JMAA XIII p. 41: f 'lt for f h lt.

Commentary:
For trh see Macdonald North Arabian Epigraphic Notes II. [GK] There might be some justification for taking the l read after tv'r as extraneous to the text because its axis is different from that of the letters that follow. There seems to be no reason why if the l belonged the author did not continue by inscribing mn ḫwlt so that the letters had a vertical rather than a horizontal stance in relation to it. It is possible that the line was inscribed either prior or subsequent to the writing of the text or that the author of HCH 72 inscribed it as the back of the m felt it was too close to the letter tv'r and so abandoned it.

Commentary:
The end of the inscription on the edge of the stone is not clear in the photograph. The z after the y is covered by an abrasion which was possibly made by the author if he realised that he had written the letter twice. The ‘ after the second z is doubtful as the letter is rather angular and the line that closes it leaves part of one of the other lines protruding. The bottom of the following ĕ and ĕ are broken. Commentary:
We suggest taking h as presentative particle: "behold, a drawing of a flute player". It is also possible to read dmyt as a first person singular verb of the suffix conjugation: "behold, I have drawn a flute player". First person verbs, however, are exceedingly rare in Safaitic. Cf. l rbb l[(k)]lk[(f)]r by w bny l- hnʾ w wgm

By Rbb l[(k)]lk[(f)]r and he built for Hnʾ and he grieved

Commentary:
The available print is not good enough to check the reading of the beginning satisfactorily. A possible explanation is that the first name is rbb and then the author wrote l and the first letter of his lineal name a k. He then realised that he had inscribed the letter incorrectly by placing the horizontal lines in the middle of the vertical stroke rather than at the top. He inscribed l again and the correct form of the letter k. The next letter seems to be a f and the next either a r or a b. It would be unusual for someone to introduce his lineal name without using the pronoun ḏ. Alternatively it is possible that the seventh letter should be emended to ḍ. The following letter is probably a h as read by HCH although it is slightly in shadow in the photograph and then there is a y. If the above explanation is correct then the lineal name might be kf or lk(r) but it would not explain the last two letters before the w.

The b of mḥrb(b) looks more like a q or d on the photograph. The reading mḥrb bn bnt bn ms¹k is clear in HCH 101 however. It is possible the second letter of the sixth name is a s². There are four series of seven lines on the rock. The b of mḥrb(b) looks more like a d and the name {ḥ}f[ḥr]r is not clear on the photograph. The f of {ḥ}f[ḥr]r is not clear on the photograph. By M'n son of Zbd son of 'tk and he kept watch for his brother [who was] following {his} camels. So O Lt and — — s²ḥ — — —

Apparatus Criticus:
SIAM II p. 192: the stone has been broken since the publication of HCH and what is left begins bn 'tk; k has a backward kick see ks² in MST) 23; the expression w ḥṛṣ 'l- 'h ḥ should be added to the list in the commentary to SIAM 35 in SIAM I p. 115-116. MCAM, HCH reads the letters in the centre of the stone as the end of the inscription whereas it is clear that they belong to another text (see HCH 102.1). Indeed HCH 102 continues in a straight line on to the broken piece of the stone and there is obviously no connection between 102 and 102.1.

Commentary:
The stone was broken when found though both pieces were present. The smaller piece bearing the first two names and possibly two or three letters (unpublished) beneath them has since disappeared. There is an apotropaic sign of seven lines on the same stone.

Apparatus Criticus:
HCH: s¹ʿdʾlh for s¹ʿdʾlh.

Commentary:
There is only a copy of the inscription but there is a clearʾbetween the l and h of the second name. Apparatus Criticus:
HCH: ḫ-l for ḫ- ’[i]. JSaN 32 p. 44: as HCH and then bn nṭḥḥ ḫ “bn nṭḥḥ him of Fṣ”.
Commentary:
There is no available photograph of the inscription. The second letter of the third name is two vertical lines with a horizontal going across the top which does not resemble the shape of any letter in the Safaitic alphabet. JSaN is correct to point out that there is no l following the й and it has been left out either by the copyist of the author of the inscription. In the copy there is no space for the letter between the й and the f.

Commentary:
There is no available photograph of the inscription.
Corpus of Safaitic inscriptions

By ʿṣd son of Hn of the lineage of ‘mrt and he longed for all the righteous kinsmen

Apparatus Criticus:

HCH: the last part ts²wq l·kll ṣdq[nh] w dbq "and he longed for every acquaintance among his friends and he was attached to them". [MAA XIII] p. 122-123: ts²wq l kllg ḡr ṣdq l· dbq "he longed for kl[lg [who] deceived". [SaN 33] p.45: "dbq at the end cannot be translated for at least 3 letters are missing in the context which immediately precedes the word". [MNM] p. 351: [w] ts²wq l· kll ṣr ṣdq "et il désirait (la présence de) tous ses bons amis". [MTB] p. 43: as HCH then ts²wq l· kll ṣr ṣdq[n] [...] dbq "il se sent ému (en songeant) aux cendres de tous les Juste[s qu'on peut?] toucher". [MNM] p. 330: [w] kll ṣr ṣdq "for all true friends". [MCAM]: correct reading.

Commentary:

There is no w before ts²wq in the copy as read by HCH although from the photograph there does seem to be one. The reading however is somewhat unclear. The final part of the text read by HCH belongs to HCH 191.1. NB ṣdq may be a technical term. It was used by the Manichaeans for "initiates" as opposed to "sammāʿ" for novices or "hearers" (Trimingham 1979: 143).

l' nʾm bn qṣmnt ḏ- lʾ mrt w nfr fʾ sʾlm w bf}(d) ʾflt sʾnt sʾr q rwʾt lʾ hdy lʾ ymt(n)

By 'nʾm son of Qṣmt of the lineage of 'mrt and he deserted and then surrendered but later escaped the year Rʾwt migrated to the inner desert to Ḥdy lʾ ymt(n)

Apparatus Criticus:
HCH: qṣmt for qṣnt; w nfr fʾ sʾlm w bn -h Ṭlt sʾnt ḥrq (ʾḥrq) rwʾt lʾ hdy lʾ ymt "and he fled and deserted and his son escaped when he dispersed (ʾafraq = farraqa) (or submerged) the hope of the Jews that he would die". MTB p. 43: w nṣr fʾ sʾlm w bn h - Ṭlt sʾnt ṣʾr q gtʾ lʾ hdy hmt "he was entrusted with keeping watch and (now all) goes well for he has just built a good shelter (from the sun and the wind) the year of the migration to the east under the leadership for a second time of Ḥmt the guide". JSFP p. 415: qṣmt. JMAA XIII p. 123-124: w nṣr fʾ sʾlm w qwd Ṭlt sʾnt ʾsʾr q ṭdqʾ lʾ hdyk nṭ "and he was on the look-out and he saved and led Ṭlt the year ṭdq went eastward to Ḥdyk [who] died". Talim p. 59: lʾ nʾm bn qṣmt ᵈ- lʾ mrt w nfr fʾ sʾlm w bn -h Ṭlt sʾnt ḥrq rwʾt lʾ hdy lʾ ymt - Ṭlt e.g. of ibdāl t/t

Commentary:
ʾd would be baʾdu "afterwards" and Ṭlt the IV form of falata "he escaped" (Lane 2435 b). This is the first occurrence of this verb in Safaitic and shows that it was distinguished from the verb ṭlt "to save deliver". The ṣ in Rʾwt has the Thamudic E form occasionally found in Safaitic, especially in this name in which it is almost always used. The reading and interpretation of the end of the text are unclear.

By Mr son of Mk son of W ln son of ---- l son of {l}t and he grieved for Fṣl and for 'mrn and for (for) S'lnt and he built for 'lbh the {cairn} untimely dead w tfhr l -h

Apparatus Criticus:
HFSI: it is possible d- 'lbjl or b'l should be restored before w wgm; w tfhr l -h "being proud of him". HDict p. 166; w tfhr l -h "and boasted of it". HIn p.405; 'trh for 'lbh. HST p. 7: tribal name b"lt in a very doubtful reading. [MAA V p. 93-94 appen. 3: m[k] for mr; end of the genealogy zry'l bn 'lt; 'lbh for 'lbh(?); w tfhr lh "and he has glorified Lah". JMAA XIII p. 194-195: lmg bn mk bn w ln bn zry'l bn 'lt w wgm l- fsl l w l- 'mrn w l- s'n't w bny l- 'lh b' s'gmr bn hgt f hr l -h; translated from w bny as "and he built upon 'h [who] became familiar with s'gmr son of Hgt. And wealth to him!".

Commentary:
It is possible the first letter after the third bn is an 'l There then appears to be two further letters and then a gap before the letters 'l which start on the next line. The following b is clear but there is then a dip in the rock with what seem to be encrustations obscuring the letter or letters before the l and t. It seems quite possible that there is a n after the b as suggested by JMAA V which is perhaps followed by a circular letter which might be an 'n or g as suggested in the edition. The interpretation of the letters after bny"l- is difficult. It seems possible that there might be a further l between the ' and l and read in the edition.

l ḥml {w} ts²wq l- mtq [-----] fṛʾt ----fṛ
By ḥml {and} he longed for Mtq [-----] rʾt ----fṛ

Apparatus Criticus:
HFSI: the fifth letter is read as a w but the commentary points out that it might be a g; ḏs²r? is read at the end. JMAA V p. 95: ḥmlg for ḥml {w}; l mtqrʾt bnt ḏs²r n “for Mtqrʾt daughter of ḏs²r” at the end.

Commentary:
The reading of the fifth sign is quite clear but how it should be interpreted is problematic. HFSI points out that it could be w or a g. If it is interpreted as a w then there are two forms of the letter in the text one a circle with a dot in the middle and the other a circle with a line across although this is not necessarily an argument against such an interpretation see for example the instances in Thamudic E where different forms of letters occur in the same inscription (King 1990: 45-46 and n. 88). For a another variant form of w in this group of texts see HFSI 67801 where the crossbar in the circle is a short line and does not reach from one side of the circle to the other. There is a chip in the rock after the third t and the remains of what might be a t are visible. After the f HFSI and JMAA V have read an s¹. This might be correct but the smallness of the "sign" suggests that it might be natural holes such as cover the rest of the rock.

By Ḫyn son of ’q[d]t of the tribe of Kmy and he erected [a cult stone] and sacrificed and returned to a profane condition and watched for his companions who had been raided, and so O Lt and Ds²r [grant] {security}, and [a reunion of loved ones] {and then} {O} {Lt} [grant] {relief} and {booty}

Commentary:

The third letter of the second name is probably a d of the type found occasionally in Hismaic where the stem is extremely short and the loop very large, see the script table in King 1990: 720 and the examples in KJA 26, KJR 79, KJC 241, etc. The only other typical Hismaic letter form is the d formed of two concentric circles, but this is also found in some Safaitic inscriptions. In the case of other letters, where there would be differences between their forms in Safaitic and Hismaic, ḏ ḏš², they have their Safaitic forms Hayajneh's interesting interpretation of the verb ḥḷ here as "to return to a profane condition" could be seen to be supported by Chelhod’s interpretation of the barām/halāl process in relation to sacrifice. He writes: "The very basis of sacrifice consists of liberating the dangerous element [derived from contact with the divine in a religious ceremony] and giving it back to the holy power, either by the shedding of blood — the liquid soul of the victim — or by total destruction as in the sacrifice of first-fruits.... Rather than considering sacrifice as a gift, it would be more exact in the majority of cases to think of it as a voluntary restitution [to the deity of the dangerous sacral element which the human had acquired while performing religious acts]" (1964: 57, and see pp. 50–57). However, it must be admitted that out of the 88 Safaitic inscriptions (so far) which contain the word ḥbū ("he sacrificed"), in only one other is the word immediately followed by w ḥḥl (SSWS 274: Genealogy w ḥbū w ḥḥl f ḥlt s l̄lm). AWS 27 is the only other text in which ḥbū and ḥḥl occur together, but here they are a long way away from each other: Genealogy w ḥbū w rʿy ḥlt w ḥlt ds r s l̄lm w ḡnmt w ḥḥl w ḥlt ṭr mn ṭr ḥlt ṭs fr. It thus seems to us, that while this is an interesting interpretation, the rapid changing of subjects which is typical of Safaitic inscriptions would make "and he camped" an equally plausible translation. The word ḥbūn is a passive participle acting as an asymmetric relative clause or adnominal phrase, see Al-Jallad 2015: 189. For the interpretation of ḥḥl see Al-Jallad 2015: 333.

HrH 2

Commentary:
This may be another, very fragmentary inscription on a block similar to the lintel bearing HrH 1. It was illegible.

Provenance:
Huǧayr al-Ḥelle, Rif Dimāšq, Syria
A ruined building on the eastern edge of a small khabra surrounded by low cliffs (c. 5 m high), except on the north side which is open. Many large roughly dressed ashlar blocks. The building must have been quite substantial, possibly with ceilings supported by a central pillar as at Khirbat ʿArʿar. It was first discovered in 1858 by Wetzstein, who gives a poetic description of it, as well as rough measurements (1860: 61–62). It appears to have been in ruins even in his day. Note, this is not Haǧar al-Ḥelle (the reported provenance of C 633-861), which has yet to be located.

\[ l\ ḥf\ bn\ ḳrt\ bn\ ḫm\ bn\ mlk\ w\ h\cdot\ týt \]

By Ḥlf son of ḳrt son of ḫm son of mlk and the sheep-fold

Commentary:
All the names are known and note that ḳrt occurs in WTI 81. The expression w h· týt is unusual but compare N w h· rgm in HCH 1 and 2. An alternative reading would be mlkw h· týt. The translation of týt as "sheep-fold" follows WH but in fact it can mean a shelter for the night for any domestic animals or "stones elevated for a sign of the way to direct the pastor when he returns by night" (Lane 366a-b).

Provenance:
Unspecified site, unspecified region, unspecified country.
The stone was displayed at an exhibition of antiquities lent by the Saudi Arabian Deputy Ministry of Antiquities & Museums, held at the Institut du Monde Aarabe, Paris, in June 1998. There was no catalogue and no provenance was given.

Ishbikkat al-Namārah, Rif Dimashq, Syria
Ishbikkat al-Namārah was visited by most of the early explorers. It is shown on the maps of Wetzstein (1860) and Stübel (1889) as a large westward meander of the Wādī al-Shām before it continues its north-eastward course. The major part of this meander is now under the lake of the Namārah dam and it is difficult, if not impossible, to locate its exact position and how far it extended both upstream towards the island and downstream. Indeed, it is not clear what exactly Ishbikkah was. Waddington writes of it as a ruǧm (Chabot 1939: 366). On the other hand, de Vogüé calls it simply "a point called Shikket el-Nemara on an escarpment on the side of the Wadi" (1860-1877: 146), while Dussaud & Macler write of "the beginning of the Ichbikké" as if it was a topographical feature of some length (1901: 88).

On a stone taken from al-ʾĪsāwī to the Suweidah Museum. Bʾrt: Note that in Arabic baʾīr applies to both male and female camels and there is no feminine form (Lane 226c–227a). The word is very rare in Safaitic with only one instance each of h bʾr (RWQ 309) and bʾrt (here).

l ḥnnʾl bn ῥwʾl bn ḫbsʾ w ḫṭb mn ḏʾl
By Ḥnnʾl son of ῥwʾl son of Ḫbsʾ. And he collected firewood from a ḏʾl tree

Commentary:
Inscription and drawing found when planning the site in October 2003. It is c. 10m west of point 1 from which the north line was drawn. Ḃṣb² does not seem to have been found before. The Ḃ is peculiar but it is difficult to see what else it can be. Ḥṭb is also new (compare Lane 593a-b) as is ḅlt which would seem to be the nomen unitatis of ḏāl which is said to be either a wild sidr tree or a tree growing on the borders of Yemen with a very pungent smell (see Lane 1816c). If it was the latter, the smell might be the factor which made the act remarkable enough to record.

Commentary:
It is possible the third letter of the second name should be read as a qg. K 44 which is a wasm is on the same rock. The translation of rḥy as “he tended or kept” is more appropriate here than “he pastured”; mrḥ is translated from Arabic murāḥ “nightly resting-place of cattle camels sheep or goats” (Lane 1183b). However Lisān also glosses mrḥ as al-arṣ al-sahl. **

Al-Tsawī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower.

I mddn bn z′brn

By Mddn son of Z′brn

Apparatus Criticus:
LP: reads z′b bn at the end and takes the inscription as incomplete but in the commentary suggests that if the inscription is complete the name at the end might be read z′brn. JSafN p.101: reads z′r bn at the end "he has cried out loudly". RylPAdd p.350: zbrn for the last name.

Commentary:
The hammer dot read as ‘ is in a different technique to the other letters of the text and might with other hammer dots nearby be extraneous. There is sufficient room however between the z and b for another letter. The first b of the text is square and the second is rounded. There are traces of a scratched cartouche surrounding this inscription and H 79. It is possible that this should be identified with LP 954. See the commentary on K 171.

should be read as g. The second letter of the fifth name is a slightly curved loop with a line curving horizontally down the middle. It is possible it should be read as a w or as a m the middle line being a correction to make the form of the letter closer to that of a m.

Commentary:
The bottom part of the first letter of the seventh name is covered by later hammering and it is possible that it is an 'i'. The beginning of the narrative has been destroyed by a crude, recently hammered sign. The author has written two connectives, w and fj, after the word m^zlm. There is a slight abrasion over the former and it is possible that he realised his mistake and made an attempt to erase it.

The identification of H 203 and this text with LP 1005 and 1004 respectively is largely based on the certain identification of LP 1006-1007 which are on a nearby rock. The inscription is on a surface wedged against the wall of a grave and is difficult to read and photograph. It is possible it continues beyond the l.

Commentary:
LP implies that LP 515 occurs on a rock by itself but it seems likely that it is either the equivalence of this text or H 213 despite the fact that both of these texts occur on rocks with other inscriptions. As H 212 = LP 516 and H 214 = LP 217 it is possible that H 213 = LP 515 however the stance of the letters in LP’s copy and in this text are the same and which perhaps makes this identification more probable.

Al-ʻIsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower.
