l hfn’l bn sb (b)(n) (g)(h)r
By {Hnʾl} (son of) Ṣb (son of) {Ghr}

Commentary:
The second, third, and fourth letters have been joined to each other. The fourth letter looks rather like a ḥ but this is probably partly because of the extension of the lines for joining. The second n is joined to the preceding b by being attached to one arm and the letters of the second bn have been joined to form a circle. The next letter might be a g or it might be another b and n joined together to form a circle. The last two letters are inscribed in thinner lines. The first one is damaged by an abrasion but it might be a h since part of a fork seems to be visible.

By ---$m$ son of {b}$w$ $r$

Commentary:
The first two letters are carelessly hammered and it is difficult to know how they should be read although they might be an ’ and a ḫ. Commentary:
Parts of the third letter are rather doubtful in the photograph. The lines of the sixth letter from the end are rather doubtful and there is an additional line which if part of the letter would suggest it should be read as a rather carelessly inscribed m. There is probably space for three names between the first and last names but most of the letters are damaged and illegible.

----l'yhdroh[t]ynn s'nt 'd rdf {f} [r'][y] ----
----l'yhdroh[t]ynn the year 'd rdf (and so) {he pastured}

Commentary:
There are traces of letters before the l which are illegible and it is very difficult to know how to interpret the following letters which are fairly clear. The crossbar of the first t might be an incidental scratch. The second f is partly covered by an abrasion and would be a different shape to the first f in the text. Commentary:
It is possible that the last letter of the fifth name should be read as a h. The letter at the end is damaged and it is possible that it is an ʿ, s, or h. It is written on the edge of the rock and it seems likely that the inscription continues on another face which was not photographed.

Commentary:
The rock is broken and the beginning of the inscription, and possibly part of the drawing, are missing. There is a line after the word ǧnm which might be extraneous or intended to be a l. Apparatus Criticus:
MNH p. 345 n. 269: on the occurrence of rdw with h- dfy.

Commentary:
The initial l is on the edge of the rock and is slightly doubtful and the second and third letter of the fourth name are worn and uncertain. The name nhd is read on the basis of ʾnʿm bn hmlk bn nhd in WH 845 and hmlk bn nhd in KRS 218. It seems likely the author left out a w before s¹ʿd. For the interpretation of ḏ in of tζr d mny see Al-Jallad 2015: 84–85, though the translations here differs from the one there.

Commentary:
The letters of the first name are carelessly carved and it is difficult to be sure of the reading. The second letter of the text might be a y but it appears to have an arm. The third letter might be a d although the loop would be formed by a careless unjoined hammer mark and the vertical line would be broken. There is a hammered mark in the curve of the fourth letter.

By S¹qn son of Wtr of the lineage ofʾ mrt wʾltʾ (gd)b (h) s¹lm wʾgʾnʾ bnʾ ns¹ {́}s²nʾ

Commentary:
The ʾg is a line with a slight zig-zag at one end and is a rather unusual shape. The letter read as the first h is written below the preceding b and following s¹ and was probably left out and then added later. It is possible it should be read as a s¹ as it does not have a very long stem although the abrasion might cover part of it. It is possible the fourth letter from the end is a h as one of the "forks" does not seem to be attached to the rest of the letter and is inscribed in a different technique.

Commentary:
The forks of the "s have been closed to give the letters the appearance of ṭ's. The arms of the second b have been closed with a line and the arms of the third b have been joined to the following n. The arms of both the ḥ’s have been closed to form a w. The first letter of the last name looks more like a r but the name would be difficult to explain if it was read as a r, and the g has a line going halfway across the circle. Parts of the second b are faint and there is no n visible after the second b and either the author left it out or it is too worn to read. Some of the lines of the letters appear to have been retraced with hammer marks.

l bgt bn bnḥrm bn ṭmt w (q)r f wrd m(l)ḥ
By Bgt son of Bnḥrm son of ṭmt and he remained at a watering-place during Aquarius

Commentary:
The letter read as q is doubtful since it looks as though the author miscalculated when carving it and drew the stem along one side of the circle rather than through the middle, making it resemble a d, though it is different from the clear d later in the text. The penultimate letter appears to have a slight prong giving it the appearance of a h. For qr cf. Arabic qarrā' "to remain (in [f] a place)" (Lane p. 2499a). It is followed by the preposition f "in, at". On the translation of m(l)ḥ, see Al-Jallad 2014: 218–220, and Al-Jallad forthcoming.

lʾʾq b nʾ ly b n ṭʾ wʾ ḥw ṭlmn

Byʾʾq b nʾ ly b ṭʾ wʾ ḥw ṭlmn

Commentary:
There are ligatures joining some of the letters some of which carelessly written and obscured by hammering. There is line joining the initial l to the following letter which has been read as ʾ. It is possible the third letter should be read as d. There is some hammering above the second n. It seems likely that the second b has been joined to the preceding letters by a line going through the middle and the following n joined to the arms of the letter giving it the appearance of a w. The name ‘m’t however is not previously attested. The next two letters might be a b and n joined together giving it the appearance of a w or maybe as above it should be read as a w and lw read as a verb. The translation of lmn at the end is problematic and even though it runs directly on from the ḏ perhaps it should be read as a separate text l mn “By Mn”.

lʾs⁹mn(ʾ) bn (bʾl)ʾ bn ----

Byʾsmʾnʾ son of (Bʾl) son of ----

Commentary:
A line has been added to the fork of the ʾ forming a š and the n has been joined to the arms of the first b. The following letter has a tail and it is possible it should be read as a sʾ. Equally it might be an attempt to join it to the preceding n or it might be an incidental chip. One arm of the letter is extended to join it to the following ʾ and then the ʾ is joined to the l by two ligatures. The end of the inscription is in shadow and cannot be read with certainty. There might be a h, some other letters, and then possibly a b.

\textit{l ---\textit{n b(n) dn h- 'r}}

By ---\textit{n} son of Dn is the hinny

\textbf{Commentary:}
The attempt at joining the letters and the infilling make the interpretation of the inscription extremely difficult. The first letter might be a r and the second letter might be an \textit{'t}, or \textit{s}, depending on whether or not the joining of the fork is part of the letter. The next letter might be a g or a m, and then there appears to be a \textit{n} joined to the adjacent letters by a line across one end. Then there is a b, and then probably a \textit{n} which has been more or less obscured by hammering which has been extended to join the back of the following letter. For the interpretation of \textit{h- 'r} see Macdonald, M.C.A. (in press, a)

By Qrs²m son of S¹ʾdl son of ʾby)n son of Bṭnt son of ḥr and 0 [] [grant] vengeance from Mkbl

Commentary:
The author wrote a b at the beginning of the third name and then corrected the mistake by writing an ʾ over it. After the connective it seems most likely that the h should be read as a vocative particle and that, to complete the invocation, it is necessary to assume that a deity’s name was left out.

Commentary:
There is a drawing of an equid and rider. The rock is chipped obscuring the head of the animal. The drawing does not look very much like an ass, but cf. Arabic ʿānah “a she-ass” (Lane 2204a), which in Safaitic may have had a masculine form *ʿān.

To Nṣr son of s’d son of ṭm belong the {monuments} at the rocky ground

Commentary:
It is possible that the letter after the second ṭ is a rectangle in which some of the lines are not joined and the horizontal lines do not appear to be as deep as the other lines and the letter should be read as a g. However it is more likely it should be read as two letters a n followed by an ill-formed f. The last four letters are inscribed in a different technique.

\( l\; 'm\)\( d\) \( b\)n\; h\( k\)\( m\)\( n\) \( b\)\( r\) \( w\)\( s\)yr \( l\) - \( h\) - \( m\) --\( dbr\)\( f\)\( h\) \( 'l\)\( ft\) - \( h\)\( m\) - \( \{h\}\)\( hr\)

'md son of Hkmn was here and he returned to the inner desert and O 'lt deliver him from (h)\( hr\)

Commentary:

The first letter has been joined to the third letter and the first d has been joined to the following b. Only a prong of the third letter from the end is visible as the rest is covered by a wasm. It is possible it should be read as a h' or š. The author has written two m's after the third h which is probably dittography. The name and the letters h- dr are directly hammered and the rest of the inscription is scratched on to the rock.

According to Littmann (1943: 1) this inscription was found about half an hour’s ride [that is approximately 2.2 km, see below] west of Al-Hifnah. The distance is based on the measures of distance and time for travel on horseback in the harrah given by Wetzstein (1860: map) which are the same as those given by Butler, viz "an average of two and three-quarter miles [= 4.4 km] per hour for ordinary going..." (Butler, Norris & Stoever 1930: vii). The measurement has been taken following the courree of the wadi, assuming that the party was riding in the wadi bed.

Apparatus Criticus:
LP 4: gw  ﷴ “this valley” for “this watering place”
CSNS pp. 93, 192; s¹nt mrd(ฎ) nbṭ ṭwd “the year ṭwd rebelled against the Nabataeans” for s¹nt mrq nbṭ gw  ﷴ “the year in which the Nabataeans passed by this valley”

Commentary:
It is tempting to make the emendation suggested by CSNS, but mrd in the sense of “he rebelled” requires ʿl- “against”, and the supposed ṭ ʿw ṭwd is very large compared to the other examples in the text. On the other hand, the use of a postposed demonstrative ṭ with a noun which is not preceded by the article is very rare. See the discussion in Al-Jallad 2015: 81–82. For the interpretation of gw see Groom 1983: 128. It is appropriate to Al-Hifnah, the location of this inscription, which is place where water is retained just below the surface.

The Wādī al-Shām is a wide gorge at this point and the site of al-Ḥifna runs downstream from a series of wells in the wādī bed to a series of pools which were still full in mid-July 1995. Some of the wells are large and probably ancient, others are of the small bedouin type. In July 1995 three were blocked and one was operational. The main concentration of inscriptions is to be found on the escarpment of the left bank of the wadi, north of the pool. This is site C in Macdonald, Al Mu’azzin, Nehmé 1996. Littmann wrote “Al-Ḥifnah is a water-place in the Wādī al-Shām, between the Hawrān mountains [Ǧabal al-ʿArab] and al-Nemārah. There are several pools in the wadi, some of which are said to contain water throughout the year. The bed of the wadi is wide enough to secure pasturage for the animals of the Bedawin during spring-time. The bank of the south [right] side is rather high and steep, and at a few places it is overhanging so that there is even shelter against the rain. In the bed of the wadi there are a great many camping-places: stone fences, more or less round, encircling places of different size that are cleaned of stones. There are also several tombs, one of which is surrounded by a small fence and seems to be a Bedawin sanctuary being covered with rags and locks of hair. The Safaitic inscriptions are mostly on the banks or behind them” (Littmann 1943: 1).

The Wādī al-Shām is a wide gorge at this point and the site of al-Hifna runs downstream from a series of wells in the wādī bed to a series of pools which were still full in mid-July 1995. Some of the wells are large and probably ancient, others are of the small bedouin type. In July 1995 three were blocked and one was operational. The main concentration of inscriptions is to be found on the escarpment of the left bank of the wadi, north of the pool. There are several pools in the wadi, some of which are said to contain water throughout the year. Commentary:
As well as this text, LP 131 [= C 3835], Dussaud M 236 (= C 3706) and Dussaud M 357 (= C 3835) are all from al-Ḥifnah and all read simply ʾbgr bn yś’m. Although it is difficult to be sure, given that all are known only from hand copies, they would appear to be four, or at least three, different texts, possibly by the same man. C 3835 identifies Dussaud M 357 with LP 131, and this is possible but uncertain.

The Wāḍi al-Ṣām is a wide gorge at this point and the site of al-Ḥifna runs downstream from a series of wells in the wāḍi bed to a series of pools which were still full in mid-July 1995. Some of the wells are large and probably ancient, others are of the small bedouin type. In July 1995 three were blocked and one was operational. The main concentration of inscriptions is to be found on the escarpment of the left bank of the wadi, north of the pool. This is site C in Macdonald, Al Muʾazzin, Nehmé 1996. Littmann wrote “Al-Ḥifnah is a water-place in the Wāḍi al-Ṣām, between the Ḥawrān mountains [Ǧabal al-ʿArab] and al-Nemārah. There are several pools in the wāḍi, some of which are said to contain water throughout the year. The bed of the wāḍi is wide enough to secure pasturage for the animals of the Bedawin during spring-time. The bank of the south [right] side is rather high and steep, and at a few places it is overhanging so that there is even shelter against the rain. In the bed of the wāḍi there are a great many camping-places: stone fences, more or less round, encircling places of different size that are cleaned of stones. There are also several tombs, one of which is surrounded by a small fence and seems to be a Bedawin sanctuary being covered with rags and locks of hair. The Safaitic inscriptions are mostly on the banks or behind them” (Littmann 1943: 1).

Commentary:

LP 47.1 is carved over LP 47.2. C identified LP 47.1 with Dussaud M 264 [= C 3734] which has the same genealogy, but the two copies are completely different, since LP 47.1 is carved over LP 47.2. The Wādī al-Shām is a wide gorge at this point and the site of al-Ḥifna runs downstream from a series of wells in the wādī bed to a series of pools which were still full in mid-July 1995. Some of the wells are large and probably ancient, others are of the small bedouin type. In July 1995 three were blocked and one was operational. The main concentration of inscriptions is to be found on the escarpment of the left bank of the wadi, north of the pool. This is site C in Macdonald, Al Mu’azzin, Nehmé 1996. Littmann wrote "Al-Ḥifnah is a water-place in the Wādī al-Shām, between the Hawrān mountains [Ǧabal al-ʿArab] and al-Nemārah. There are several pools in the wadi, some of which are said to contain water throughout the year. The bed of the wadi is wide enough to secure pasturage for the animals of the Bedawin during spring-time. The bank of the south (right) side is rather high and steep, and at a few places it is overhanging so that there is even shelter against the rain. In the bed of the wadi there are a great many camping-places: stone fences, more or less round, encircling places of different size that are cleaned of stones. There are also several tombs, one of which is surrounded by a small fence and seems to be a Bedawin sanctuary being covered with rags and locks of hair. The Safaitic inscriptions are mostly on the banks or behind them" (Littmann 1943: 1).

The bank of the south [right] side is rather high and steep, and at a few places it is overhanging so that there is even shelter against the rain. In the bed of the wadi there are a great many camping-places: stone fences, more or less round, encircling places of different size that are cleaned of stones. There are also several tombs, one of which is surrounded by a small fence and seems to be a Bedawin sanctuary being covered with rags and locks of hair. The Safaitic inscriptions are mostly on the banks or behind them” (Littmann 1943: 1).

The Wādī al-Šām is a wide gorge at this point and the site of al-Ḥifnā runs downstream from a series of wells in the wādī bed to a series of pools which were still full in mid-July 1995. Some of the wells are large and probably ancient, others are of the small bedouin type. In July 1995 three were blocked and one was operational. The main concentration of inscriptions is to be found on the escarpment of the left bank of the wadi, north of the pool. This is site C in Macdonald, Al Muʿazzin, Nehmé 1996. Littmann wrote “Al-Ḥifnah is a water-place in the Wādī al-Šām, between the Hawrān mountains [Ǧabal al-ʿArab] and al-Nemārah. There are several pools in the wadi, some of which are said to contain water throughout the year. The Wādī al-Shām is a wide gorge at this point and the site of al-Ḥifnah runs downstream from a series of wells in the wādī bed to a series of pools which were still full in mid-July 1995. Some of the wells are large and probably ancient, others are of the small bedouin type. In July 1995 three were blocked and one was operational. The main concentration of inscriptions is to be found on the escarpment of the left bank of the wadi, north of the pool. This is site C in Macdonald, Al Mu’azzin, Nehmê 1996. Littmann wrote "Al-Ḥifnah is a water-place in the Wādī al-Shām, between the Ǧabar mountains [Ǧabal al-ʿArab] and al-Nemārah. There are several pools in the wadi, some of which are said to contain water throughout the year. The bed of the wadi is wide enough to secure pasturage for the animals of the Bedawin during spring-time. The bank of the south [right] side is rather high and steep, and at a few places it is overhanging so that there is even shelter against the rain. In the bed of the wadi there are a great many camping-places: stone fences, more or less round, encircling places of different size that are cleaned of stones. There are also several tombs, one of which is surrounded by a small fence and seems to be a Bedawin sanctuary being covered with rags and locks of hair. The Safaitic inscriptions are mostly on the banks or behind them” (Littmann 1943: 1).

There are several pools in the wadi, some of which are said to contain water throughout the year. The bed of the wadi is wide enough to secure pasturage for the animals of the Bedawin during spring-time. The bank of the south [right] side is rather high and steep, and at a few places it is overhanging so that there is even shelter against the rain. In the bed of the wadi there are a great many camping-places: stone fences, more or less round, encircling places of different size that are cleaned of stones. There are also several tombs, one of which is surrounded by a small fence and seems to be a Bedawin sanctuary being covered with rags and locks of hair. The Safaitic inscriptions are mostly on the banks or behind them” (Littmann 1943: 1).

The Wādī al-Ṣām is a wide gorge at this point and the site of al-Ḥifnah runs downstream from a series of wells in the wādī bed to a series of pools which were still full in mid-July 1995. Some of the wells are large and probably ancient, others are of the small bedouin type. In July 1995 three were blocked and one was operational. The main concentration of inscriptions is to be found on the escarpment of the left bank of the wadi, north of the pool. This is site C in Macdonald, Al Muʿazzin, Nehmé 1996. Commentary:
The text is carved in large letters over two faces of the rock. A ḥs’y is a place where water sinks easily through the permeable soil or sand and is then stopped by an impervious layer of rock and so is trapped relatively close to the surface and can be reached with only a small amount of digging (Lane 572c–573a, Littmann 1940: 123–124, Groom 1983: 112 under ḥisā). Al-Ḥifnah is a place of this sort and indeed the name, ḥifnah, means a place where water collects (see Groom 1983: 111 ḥifnah and 113, under ḥufnah).

The bank of the south [right] side is rather high and steep, and at a few places it is overhanging so that there is even shelter against the rain. In the bed of the wadi there are a great many camping-places: stone fences, more or less round, encircling places of different size that are cleaned of stones. There are also several tombs, one of which is surrounded by a small fence and seems to be a Bedawin sanctuary being covered with rags and locks of hair. The Safaitic inscriptions are mostly on the banks or behind them” (Littmann 1943: 1).

联络 since son of Rb’l son of ’n’m son of ’s¹ and he camped {here} (and then) built an enclosure and [his is the drawing of] this young she-camel {and so} Lt blind whoever scratches out this inscription

Apparatus Criticus:
Corpus of Safaitic inscriptions

LP: (ṣjwr <<w>> h- bkrt "and drew <<>> the young she-camel" for (ṣjwr <<w>> h- bkrt "(and then) built an enclosure and [his is the drawing of] this young she-camel"); w h lt "and O Lt" for f lt "and so Lt".

Commentary:
On a stone with RR 12 and an elaborate rock drawing. This text is thinly chiselled to the left of LP 170 and runs down to the right of the camel and then curls under it. The lower parts of 3 letters (d r f) in the middle have been lost where the edge of the stone has been broken. This was already the case when Littmann copied it. However enough of the tops of the letters have survived to make the reading virtually certain. In the next phrase, the photograph shows that what Littmann copied and read as w in ṣjwr is actually a t and so s’t appears to be a better reading. This is usually found as a substantive in Safaitic, but there is one inscription, SAMAS 9.42.1 in which it occurs as a verb. The rather abrupt ṣh C bkrt "and [his is the drawing of] the young she-camel" can be paralleled in Ms 44. Finally, it can be seen on the photographs that what Littmann copied and read as w lt before lt is actually a badly carved f, thus f lt.

Provenance:

Al-Mróšan, Al-Suweidah, Syria

Al-Mróšan consists of four long, low mounds, running roughly east-west in a flat area where the Wādī al-Gharz spreads out. These mounds create a series of "gorges" perhaps 3 m high in the wadi which is otherwise very flat and at this point hardly distinguishable from the surrounding area, the "wadi-bed" consisting of several channels approximately 30–80 cm deep and 4–10 m wide. The southerly three mounds are covered with graves and enclosures. Much of the rock is not suitable for inscribing. It was visited in 1995 by the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme and all the published texts it rediscovered came from the most northerly of the southern three mounds, and most were concentrated at its eastern end.

Al-Mróshan consists of four long, low mounds, running roughly east-west in a flat area where the Wādi al-Gharz spreads out. These mounds create a series of "gorges" perhaps 3 m high in the wadi which is otherwise very flat and at this point hardly distinguishable from the surrounding area, the "wadi-bed" consisting of several channels approximately 30–80 cm deep and 4–10 m wide. The southerly three mounds are covered with graves and enclosures. Much of the rock is not suitable for inscribing. It was visited in 1995 by the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme and all the published texts it rediscovered came from the most northerly of the southern three mounds, and most were concentrated at its eastern end.

Provenance:
Al-Mrōshan consists of four long, low mounds, running roughly east-west in a flat area where the Wādī al-Gharz spreads out. These mounds create a series of "gorges" perhaps 3 m high in the wadi which is otherwise very flat and at this point hardly distinguishable from the surrounding area, the "wadi-bed" consisting of several channels approximately 30–80 cm deep and 4–10 m wide. The southerly three mounds are covered with graves and enclosures. Much of the rock is not suitable for inscribing. It was visited in 1995 by the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme and all the published texts it rediscovered came from the most northerly of the southern three mounds, and most were concentrated at its eastern end.

for Ht. so O Lt [grant] security in the year in which the wolf encountered 'ns¹ and ejection [from the grave] to him who effaces this inscription

Apparatus Criticus:
LP 237: f h lt for f lt; (g)h b–d b 'ns¹ "the year in which the wolf encountered men" [or 'ns¹ in the commentary]; yʿwr for yʿwrn.

Commentary:
On one face of a large stone. The author originally wrote hl after the r in the fifth name but then scraped over these letters and wrote the b. The divine name/epithet hlt is also found in SIJ 840. For another inscription in which the author sets up a standing stone for one deity and then immediately prays to another see RQA 9. Note the unusual plural (yʿwrn) in the curse.

[Latitude/Longitude: 32.844275 / 37.19575]
Al-Mrōshan consists of four long, low mounds, running roughly east-west in a flat area where the Wādī al-Gharz spreads out. These mounds create a series of "gorges" perhaps 3 m high in the wadi which is otherwise very flat and at this point hardly distinguishable from the surrounding area, the "wadi-bed" consisting of several channels approximately 30–80 cm deep and 4–10 m wide. The southerly three mounds are covered with graves and enclosures. Much of the rock is not suitable for inscribing. It was visited in 1995 by the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme and all the published texts it rediscovered came from the most northerly of the southern three mounds, and most were concentrated at its eastern end.

Commentary:

There is a stray scratch, shallower than the lines which form the letters, between the $lām$ auctor is and the $h$. Scratches around the $b$ of the second $bn$ give it the appearance of a $m$, but it is clearly a $b$. The signs for $b$ and $r$ are clearly distinguished in this text, with $r$ consisting of a long straight line with a short curve at one end. For the interpretation of the verb $tbb$ compare Classical Arabic tabba “he suffered loss” or “he became lost”, here in the infinitive, compare Arabic tabab, tabáb, tabīb “being lost”. On $b- r'y \text{ }dkr$ see Al-Jallad 2016: 99.

Commentary:

The $lām$ auctor is and possibly one or more names appear to be missing. LP reads $\text{gmnt -h}$, but $\text{gmnt}$ is clear on the photograph as is the $n$ (not “an incomplete $y'$) of $b'l's'mn$. One side-stroke of the final $'s$ is missing. LP reads LP 259.1 as the end of this text but there seems no justification for this since it begins at the opposite side of the face from the end of LP 259. to be a mistake for s’wr (in 258), though there are no other examples of / in this text for comparison, and carving r as a straight line may simply have been an idiosyncrasy of this author. Similarly, mk for mlk (in 258) could be a mistake, though it might represent a difference of pronunciation. Note that the divine name is b’ls¹my, an Arabian re-formation of the more usual b’ls¹mn which is found in LP 259.

Al-Namârah itself is an “island” in a basin at the confluence of the Wādī al-Ṣawṭ and the Wādī al-Šām. The island rises to a considerable height above the wadi bed. On its top are the ruins of a Roman fort the outlines of which, and the square north-east and south-west towers, can still be made out. However, much of the masonry has been reused to build a mediaeval mausoleum, including a lintel with an unfinished Greek inscription mentioning Marcus Aurelius (Waddington 1870: no. 2264) and stone doors. There are many Safaitic, Greek and two Latin graffiti on the slopes of the island and the banks of the wadi. In antiquity, there were small dams, cisterns, wells and diversion channels to trap the water and to lead it to nearby fields, see Macdonald 2009.

Al-ʿĪsāwī, Rif Dimashq, Syria
[Latitude/Longitude: 32.89645 / 37.31101]

Al-ʿĪsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Rubbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

The two prongs of the fork of the h introducing the invocation have been joined making it into a y. However the prongs have then been extended beyond the join. The The first letter of rm’l cannot possibly be a ṣ as suggested by Littmann and is similar to the r of qbr. The “flaw in the stone” (LP p. 69) after this letter can be seen on the photograph. The following m is faint but clearly visible on the original. Between this and the ‘
there is a small ridge on the surface and no letter was written. The last letter of the word and the sign which immediately follows it are both considerably longer than the examples of n at the beginning of the text but appreciably shorter than the first occurring qrb and similar in length to the penultimate letter. Rmʿn is presumably a toponym referring to al-ʿIsawi itself or a place nearby since the author would be unlikely to invoke the topical deity of another place to protect a drawing left here. Littmann interpreted yʿwrn as the 3rd m. pl of the suffix conjugation. However, Al-Jallad (2015: 97–98) considers it more likely that it represents the energetic ending. For the interpretation of nqʾt see Al-Jallad 2015: 335, under QYʾ.

Provenance:

By ʾnʿm son of ʿsʾwd is the young she-camel

Commentary:
Written around a drawing of a camel. There are several extraneous lig htly scratched lines among the letters, and those on either side of the ʾ are particularly confusing. It is almost certain that LP 93, by one of "the servants of the Princeton University Archaeological Expedition" (Littmann 1943: iii) is another copy of this inscription.

Commentary:
Although the name bʿwn is previously unattested, Littmann's reading rgwn seems less likely. The b is identical to the examples in the two bn's and the second letter of the name would be very small for a g. Written round a drawing of a she-camel on an adjacent face to that bearing LP 283

Al-ʾIsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Rubbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

LP 1095–1096 were copied by "servants of the Princeton University Archaeological Expedition" (see LP p. iii) and Littmann did not recognize the identity of these two copies with LP 285 and 286, which he himself had copied. His emendation of the second name in LP 1096, was forced by the fact that the copyist had assigned the t of "ʾtr in LP 1095 (= LP 286) to this text, an understandable error given its position. Since ʾṣṭly seemed an unlikely name Littmann read it as ʾṣḥly.

Commentary:

Bt for bnt is frequent in Safaitic. The upper fork of the ʿ of the third name has been filled in. It is not necessary to assume with LP that the ʿ and t of this name were omitted and added above the line. If LP 285 (= Mu 12) was written first it would have forced a change of direction on the author of LP 286 (= Mu 13). The fourth letter of ʿtr has a shallower curve, like the r of rdy, unlike the tighter curves of the b’s of bt and bn. There appears to be a line joining the l of the last name and the following w. LP 1095–1096 were copied by “servants of the Princeton University Archaeological Expedition” (Littmann 1943: iii) and Littmann did not recognize the identity of these two copies with LP 285 and 286, which he himself had copied. The copyist of 1095 and 1096 assigned the t of ʿtr in LP 1095 to the second name (sʾly) in LP 1096 (= LP 285) which Littmann then emended to sʾ(t)bly.

Area A. Al-‘Īsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower.

By ḡry son of ṣr son of Kn is the carving

Apparatus Criticus:
LP 311: ḡḥy for ḡṛy; omits bn kn; reads h-ḥṭṭ with LP 312.

Commentary:
Associated drawing to be numbered. See also photo PH ZF 7-8 This author may be the same as that of C 54. The reading of the third and fourth letters is complicated by the fact that the surface in this area of the face has flaked and repatinated to exactly the same colour as the letters. It is this flaking which is responsible for the apparent fork at the end of the fifth letter which caused Littmann to read it as h. The second bn is at 90° to the rest of the text and the b is square as opposed to the rounded first b. Although the letters h-ḥṭṭ are incised (like M 90) rather than chiselled (like the rest of M 89) their size and position suggests that they are more likely to belong to 89 than to 90.

Commentary:
The last letter of the fifth name has a small abrasion at each end which may cover hooks making the name s²br as read by Littmann. However, if so, these would be far less pronounced than the hooks of the r’s in s²br, s¹ry and ‘tr and a careful examination of the original convinced us that the letter was b.

lʾḏrb bn ghm

By ʾḏrb bn Ghm

Apparatus Criticus:
LP 315: ʾḏrr for ʾḏrb but in the commentary ʾḏrb is given as one of several possible alternative readings.

Commentary:
The r and the b of the first name are clearly distinguished and the latter is identical to the b of bn. There is therefore no doubt about the reading ʾḏrb. Immediately after the b there is a failed attempt at writing bn and Littmann copied this rather than the successful second attempt immediately below it.

The reading is dear though some parts are visible only in certain lights. The inscription is finely incised and the letters have square forms from the beginning up to and including the first two letters of ḥrs, after which the "normal" script is used. The text clearly postdates the drawing, since it carefully avoids encroaching on it and thus was carved by the author after his father had made the drawing. On dmy l- ’h see Macdonald, Al Mu’azzin & Nehmé 1996: 470; on h- nw see p. 471. Note that the stone bearing LP 403 was found a few metres away from this stone and is by a first cousin of the author of LP 325 who says that the drawing of a dancing girl encircled by his text was made by his paternal uncle ṑm, the father of Mṯr in LP 325. The meaning of the verb dmy "to draw a picture" was first proposed by G. Lankester Harding in the commentary to HCH 73. Another example of the expression w dmy l- ’h “and drew a picture for him” can be found in C 1186. The syntax of the phrase w ḥrs h- nw m ’ḥ-ḥ h m- mdbr is awkward and the literal meaning "while they kept watch for the tribal migration with his brother from the inner desert." could also mean that “they kept watch for the tribal migration in which his brother was taking part [on its way] from the inner desert.” In either case m ’ḥ-ḥ may have been an afterthought.

Al-ʾIsawi is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Rubbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

Commentary:
The inscription was carved after the the drawing and LP 325, which it carefully avoids. The s² of the third name is attached to the y of y’wr in LP 325 and the letter(s?) before it is/are damaged by abrasions. The word after s²nt is clearly s²rt [on both the original and Littmann’s copy] and LP’s reading s²r h- mlk is therefore impossible. For our interpretation see MiSS p. 468. The last three letters are lightly scratched. For the verb s²rt ‘to serve in a military unit’ see Macdonald 2014: 59–160, and n. 78. For ‘rd compare Arabic ard/ird an "army" or a "great army" (Lane 2007a, 2008a).

Commentary:
The text starts just behind the head of the dromedary and runs up the front of its hump and down the back of it. There is something between the front legs of the Bactrian camel but it is too damaged to interpret and may not belong to the inscription. There is a patch of heavy hammering immediately above the dromedary’s hump which has obscured part of the text and only the lower parts of an s² and a f can be seen after it. The last three letters are facing in the opposite direction to the rest of the text and may not belong to it. They were read as a separate inscription by Is.M 115.

Commentary:
The expression h- bmy ʾl 'wd is an example of the demonstrative adjective h- used before a genitive construction, on which see Al-Jallad 2015: 77–78. For bmy (cf. Arabic himā) as an area of protected pasture, either forbidden to the animals of all but a certain group, or tribal leader, or dedicated to a deity, or a sort of reservation where wild and domestic animals could graze without being hunted or slaughtered. See, for instance, Chelhod 1964: 230–231; 1979: 393; Henninger 1981: 256–258. The word mʾwn is either an epithet of Lt (as in Al-Jallad 2015: 268) or could be in construct with sʾlm as interpreted here. Compare Classical Arabic maʿān, maʿwānah, maʿwānah “help, assistance” (Lane 2203c).

l ẓnʾl bn sʾlmn bn sʾl mw rʾy sʾnt sʾ mh h-ʾqy

By Ẓnʾl son of Sʾlmn son of Sʾlm and he pastured in the year in which he pastured the desert

Apparatus Criticus:
LP 343: sʾnt sʾ mh h-ʾqṣl "the year in which he let the small herd of camels pasture" for sʾnt sʾ mh h-ʾqy "the year in which he pastured the desert"

Commentary:
Unfortunately LP’s interpretation was based on taking the t as a s and taking a stray line at the end of LP 342 as a b belonging to the end of this text. As can be seen on the photographs, the line is much thicker and more firmly incised than the last two letters of this text and there would have been no reason for the author to have placed it there if it was part of his text. There are thinly scratched lines crossing between LP 343 and the last line of of LP 342 and one of these crossed the bottom of the final y in LP 343. LP seems to have mistaken this for the fork of a s. All the letters are clear but it is difficult to interpret the text. The translation offered here is not very satisfactory. It is based on the Arabic verb sammaḥa “to let [beasts] pasture” (Hava p. 337b) and Arabic qiyy “desert” (Hava p. 636a).

Al-ʿIsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Rūbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

Commentary:
A chiselled š between bn and ʿb of LP 346 [= C 3264] and three other possible letters around the end of the text were read by Littmann as LP 347 (l ṣ b). However, their position on the stone and their distribution in around C 3264 make this improbable and they do not seem to constitute a text.

Apparatus Criticus:

LP 406: w wr[d] {b-} {h-} mrbd; w ḥwsʾ bl -h (ʾ)b -h [h-]gw ṣlf h- sʾty

MST p. 7 & n. 30: w ṣlf h- sʾty "the winter brought no rain"

Commentary:

w wr[d] {b-} {h-} mrbd: As can be seen on the photographs, Littmann’s reading w wr[d] h- nmr(t) is not possible. A marabb in Arabic is an area of "low-lying ground where the rain-water of a channel is absorbed" (Groom 1983: 177), hence the water is not very far below the surface. w ḥwsʾ bl -h (ʾ)b -h [h-]gw: Again, Littmann’s reading is not supported by the photographs. In Arabic, a ḡaww is topographical term meaning "a basin in which water collects", an "open plain with many wells" (Groom 1983: 129), and clearly the context requires something similar to this ṣlf h- sʾty. In Classical Arabic, the basic meaning of the root Š-L-F is to "disappoint expectations" and the verb is used in for instance salīfa ʾl-sahāb "the clouds had in them no water" (Lane 1717c-1718a), hence here "the winter having brought no rain" (see Macdonald 1992: 7 and n. 30). At the end of the text, there is waḥt looks like a ḡ carved at right angles to the letters ṣnt and which does not seem to be part of the text.

Apparatus Criticus:
LP 407: ḫr for hr; rʾy bql b- ʿks² ʾmt “and he tended flocks seeking green fodder at the expense of the community” for rʾy bql b- ʿks² ʾmt “pastured on spring herbage during the cosmical setting/full moon of Libra”; w ngy s¹nt (ʾ)bʾs² m- sʾr y h- ns² ʾndḥ “and he rushed forth in the year in which he was grieved by the scoff of the people” for w ngy s¹nt (ʾ)bʾs² m- sʾr y h- ns² ʾld-h “and he was saved the year in which calamity befell his children through the epidemic of pox [lit. the pox of the people]”; w bll h- nʾm “he drove together and lost the camels” for “and the livestock died [lit. went astray].”

O’Connor (1986: 609-610) wrongly emends what is clearly m- sʾr y to read msʾrʾk.

Commentary:
The rʾs in this text have hooks and the second name is clearly ḫr. For b- ʿks² ʾmt meaning “during the cosmical setting/full moon of Libra” see Al-Jallad 2016: 101. Littmann omitted the (ʾ) after sʾnt on his copy. On the black-and-white photograph showing a detail of this section of the text the very faint lower fork of the ʾ can be made out. In sʾnt (ʾ)bʾs² m- sʾr y h- ns² ʾld-h, the verb is “bʾs²’ calamity befell (him)” (Lane 146a), the subject being ʾld-h (awlādu-hu). In the expression sʾr y h- ns², sʾr y would seem to be cognate with Classical Arabic sʾrʾn “a kind of pox (Lane 1545c) and h- ns² of the people”, thus “the pox of the people”, i.e. “an epidemic”. dll may be meant literally “went astray” or metaphorically “died”. nʾm = “camels, cattle, sheep”. Note that O’Connor (1986: 609-610) wrongly emends the text in order to create the word msʾrʾk. See also Photo Misc PH 24. sʾnt h- bʾs² m- sʾṛy hns² ʾḥw perhaps h- bʾs² m- sʾr y h- nʾm ʾld-h [ ld = ‘great enemy’] (M & Mu)

AlʾĪsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

Al-Ṭisawi is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wadi Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Rubbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

Commentary:
It is not clear what nhḏ means here. In Arabic, nahda means to "arise, hasten" and inḥadda (√H-D-D) means "to be broken or crushed", neither of which seem suitable for this context. It seems therefore better to take it as the personal name which is known in Safaitic.

LP 463 (Is.R 135)

l rhn bn $sg't$ h-frs

By $\text{rh}$n son of $\text{s}$g$\prime$t is the horse

Apparatus Criticus:
LP 463: $\text{s}$g$\prime$t for $\text{s}$g$\prime$t

Commentary:
On the same face as LP 464. It seems that the author of LP 464 drew the picture but that the author of this inscription (LP 463) then appropriated the credit for the drawing and rendered the original author's name unrecognizable. In view of this, it seems likely that the author of LP 464 used the end of of 463 ($t$ h-frs?) as the end of his own inscription.

Provenance:
Al-$\text{Is}â\text{wi}$, Rif Dimashq, Syria

[Latitude/Longitude: 32.89645 / 37.31101]

Al-$\text{Is}â\text{wi}$ is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wâdî Shâm as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namârah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

l '{$\text{b}$}dt h-frs

By 'bdt is the horse

Apparatus Criticus:
LP: 'dt for '({$\text{b}$})dt

Commentary:
On the same face as LP 463 and the drawing of a horse. The second letter has been filled in and the third has had projections added it to turn it from a to a '. It seems that the author of LP 464 carved the drawing but that the author of LP 463 then appropriated the credit for the drawing by carving his name at such an angle that he could use the $t$ of the original author's name and h-frs'.

Al-ʿIsawi is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Rubbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

Provenance:
"On the road from Qabr Nāṣir to Ṣanayim al-Gharz, not far from east from Ghadīr al-Darb" (Littmann 1943: 170), Rif Dimashq, Syria
[Latitude/Longitude: 32.8333 / 37.0667]
Unfortunately, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme was unable to locate the sites of Qabr Nāṣir and Ṣanayim al-Gharz and they do not appear in Geonames. Dussaud & Macler describe Ghadīr al-Darb as “a muddy pool of water” in Wāḍī al-Gharz (1903: 27 [429]). The co-ordinates given above are those provided by Geonames, but this places it some 220 m north of the left bank of the wadi, so they should be taken as approximate.

Provenance:

[Latitude/Longitude: 32.76784 / 37.00326]
The Wādī al-Shām is a wide gorge at this point and the site of al-Ḥifnah runs downstream from a series of wells in the wādī bed to a series of pools which were still full in mid-July 1995. Some of the wells are large and probably ancient, others are of the small bedouin type. In July 1995 three were blocked and one was operational. The main concentration of inscriptions is to be found on the escarpment of the left bank of the wadi, north of the pool. This is site C in Macdonald, Al Muʿazzin, Nehmé 1996. Littmann wrote "Al-Ḥifnah is a water-place in the Wādī al-Shām, between the Hawrān mountains [Gabal al-ʿArab] and al-Nemārah. There are several pools in the wadi, some of which are said to contain water throughout the year. The bed of the wadi is wide enough to secure pasturage for the animals of the Bedawin during spring-time. The bank of the south [right] side is rather high and steep, and at a few places it is overhanging so that there is even shelter against the rain. In the bed of the wadi there are a great many camping-places: stone fences, more or less round, encircling places of different size that are cleaned of stones. There are also several tombs, one of which is surrounded by a small fence and seems to be a Bedawin sanctuary being covered with rags and locks of hair. The Safaitic inscriptions are mostly on the banks or behind them” (Littmann 1943: 1).

The Wādī al-Shām is a wide gorge at this point and the site of al-Hifnāh runs downstream from a series of wells in the wādī bed to a series of pools which were still full in mid-July 1995. Some of the wells are large and probably ancient, others are of the small bedouin type. In July 1995 three were blocked and one was operational. The main concentration of inscriptions is to be found on the escarpment of the left bank of the wadi, north of the pool. This is site C in Macdonald, Al Muʾazzin, Nehmé 1996. Littmann wrote "Al-Ḥifnāh is a water-place in the Wādī al-Shām, between the Ḥawrān mountains [Gabal al-ʿArab] and al-Nemārah. There are several pools in the wadi, some of which are said to contain water throughout the year. The bed of the wadi is wide enough to secure pasturage for the animals of the Bedawin during spring-time. The bank of the south [right] side is rather high and steep, and at a few places it is overhanging so that there is even shelter against the rain. In the bed of the wadi there are a great many camping-places: stone fences, more or less round, encircling places of different size that are cleaned of stones. There are also several tombs, one of which is surrounded by a small fence and seems to be a Bedawin sanctuary being covered with rags and locks of hair. The Safaitic inscriptions are mostly on the banks or behind them” (Littmann 1943: 1).

The Wādī al-Shām is a wide gorge at this point and the site of al-Ḥifnah runs downstream from a series of wells in the wādī bed to a series of pools which were still full in mid-July 1995. Some of the wells are large and probably ancient, others are of the small bedouin type. In July 1995 three were blocked and one was operational. The main concentration of inscriptions is to be found on the escarpment of the left bank of the wadi, north of the pool. This is site C in Macdonald, Al Muʿazzin, Nehmé 1996. Littmann wrote “Al-Ḥifnah is a water-place in the Wādī al-Shām, between the Ḥawrān mountains [Gabal al-ʿArab] and al-Nemārah. There are several pools in the wadi, some of which are said to contain water throughout the year. The bed of the wadi is wide enough to secure pasturage for the animals of the Bedawin during spring-time. The bank of the south [right] side is rather high and steep, and at a few places it is overhanging so that there is even shelter against the rain. In the bed of the wadi there are a great many camping-places: stone fences, more or less round, encircling places of different size that are cleaned of stones. There are also several tombs, one of which is surrounded by a small fence and seems to be a Bedawin sanctuary being covered with rags and locks of hair. The Safaitic inscriptions are mostly on the banks or behind them” (Littmann 1943: 1).

Some of the wells are large and probably ancient, others are of the small bedouin type. In July 1995 three were blocked and one was operational. The main concentration of inscriptions is to be found on the escarpment of the left bank of the wadi, north of the pool. This is site C in Macdonald, Al Muʾazzin, Nehmé 1996. Littmann wrote “Al-Ḥifnah is a water-place in the Wādī al-Shām, between the Ḥawrān mountains [Ǧabal al-ʿArab] and al-Nemārah. There are several pools in the wadi, some of which are said to contain water throughout the year. The bed of the wadi is wide enough to secure pasturage for the animals of the Bedawin during spring-time. The bank of the south [right] side is rather high and steep, and at a few places it is overhanging so that there is even shelter against the rain. In the bed of the wadi there are a great many camping-places: stone fences, more or less round, encircling places of different size that are cleaned of stones. There are also several tombs, one of which is surrounded by a small fence and seems to be a Bedawin sanctuary being covered with rags and locks of hair. The Safaitic inscriptions are mostly on the banks or behind them” (Littmann 1943: 1).

The bank of the south [right] side is rather high and steep, and at a few places it is overhanging so that there is even shelter against the rain. In the bed of the wadi there are a great many camping-places: stone fences, more or less round, encircling places of different size that are cleaned of stones. There are also several tombs, one of which is surrounded by a small fence and seems to be a Bedawin sanctuary being covered with rags and locks of hair. The Safaitic inscriptions are mostly on the banks or behind them" (Littmann 1943: 1).

The Wādī al-Shām is a wide gorge at this point and the site of al-Ḥifnah runs downstream from a series of wells in the wādī bed to a series of pools which were still full in mid-July 1995. Some of the wells are large and probably ancient, others are of the small bedouin type. In July 1995 three were blocked and one was operational. The main concentration of inscriptions is to be found on the escarpment of the left bank of the wadi, north of the pool. This is site C in Macdonald, Al Muʿazzin, Nehmé 1996. Litmann wrote "Al-Ḥifnah is a water-place in the Wādī al-Shām, between the Ḥawrān mountains [Ǧabal al-ʿArab] and al-Nemārah. There are several pools in the wadi, some of which are said to contain water throughout the year. Al-Mrōshan consists of four long, low mounds, running roughly east-west in a flat area where the Wādī al-Gharz spreads out. These mounds create a series of "gorges" perhaps 3 m high in the wadi which is otherwise very flat and at this point hardly distinguishable from the surrounding area, the "wadi-bed" consisting of several channels approximately 30–80 cm deep and 4–10 m wide. The southerly three mounds are covered with graves and enclosures. Much of the rock is not suitable for inscribing. It was visited in 1995 by the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme and all the published texts it rediscovered came from the most northerly of the southern three mounds, and most were concentrated at its eastern end.

These mounds create a series of "gorges" perhaps 3 m high in the wadi which is otherwise very flat and at this point hardly distinguishable from the surrounding area, the "wadi-bed" consisting of several channels approximately 30–80 cm deep and 4–10 m wide. The southerly three mounds are covered with graves and enclosures. Much of the rock is not suitable for inscribing. It was visited in 1995 by the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme and all the published texts it rediscovered came from the most northerly of the southern three mounds, and most were concentrated at its eastern end.

These mounds create a series of "gorges" perhaps 3 m high in the wadi which is otherwise very flat and at this point hardly distinguishable from the surrounding area, the "wadi-bed" consisting of several channels approximately 30–80 cm deep and 4–10 m wide. The southerly three mounds are covered with graves and enclosures. Much of the rock is not suitable for inscribing. It was visited in 1995 by the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme and all the published texts it rediscovered came from the most northerly of the southern three mounds, and most were concentrated at its eastern end.

Al-Namārah itself is an "island" in a basin at the confluence of the Wādī al-Šawṭ and the Wādī al-Šām. The island rises to a considerable height above the wadi bed. On it's top are the ruins of a Roman fort the outlines of which, and the square north-east and south-west towers, can still be made out. However, much of the masonry has been reused to build a mediaeval mausoleum, including a lintel with an unfinished Greek inscription mentioning Marcus Aurelius (Waddington 1870: no. 2264) and stone doors. There are many Safaitic, Greek and two Latin graffiti on the slopes of the island and the banks of the wadi. In antiquity, there were small dams, cisterns, wells and diversion channels to trap the water and to lead it to nearby fields, see Macdonald 2009.

Al-ʾĪsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Rubbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

Al-ʿĪsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

Al-ʿĪsāwī, Rif Dimashq, Syria

Provenance:
Al-ʿĪsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-ʿNamārah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

Al-Iṣāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

AlʿIsawi is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wadi Sham as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namara dam to the Rubbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

Al-ʿĪsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower. Littmann visited the site twice when he and other members of the expeditions copied some 450 inscriptions. Between 1996 and 2003, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme [SESP] made a comprehensive survey of the site recording over 3500 inscriptions.

Provenance:
Rijaq Qal‘, Rif Dimashq, Syria

[Latitude/Longitude: 32.9764 / 37.3136]
The name "Rijaq Qal‘" was applied by nineteenth-century travellers to at least four large outcrops at the southern end of the Ruḥba, to the south and south-west of the modern water tower. This helps to explain the curious fact that there is no overlapping between the "Rijaq Qal‘" copies of de Vogüé, Wetzstein and Dussaud & Macler, and only in a very few cases between those of de Vogüé and Waddington who were travelling together. The probability that there were multiple cairns with this name is supported by the fact that while Waddington wrote that it was 10 minutes [ride] from al-Udaysiyah to Rijaq Qal‘, Dussaud & Macler say that the journey between the two took 30 minutes. In 1995, the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme identified the sites visited by Wetzstein and by Dusaud & Macler but did not find those where de Vogüé and Waddington had worked. The inscriptions found at Rijaq Qal‘ "A" were all texts copied by Wetzstein and no one else. It is likely therefore that this is the place he regarded as "Rijaq Qal‘". Note that the co-ordinates given here are very approximate.

\(\text{ṭrm bn bn(n)}\text{n} \text{w thr w ḏḥn (l-)} \text{rḥy w ḡnm nqt}\)

Apparatus Criticus:

MA: \(\text{ṭrm bn rḥt w bn[y]}\text{n} \text{w ḏḥn w ḡnm nqt} \text{To ṭrm bn Rḥt who built (married) scarified [sic “sacrificed”?] and was consequently satisfied. He gained a she-camel.}\)

Commentary:

The ed. pr reads the letters in a bizarre order (p. 34). The order suggested here seems more reasonable and produces better sense. On the photograph there are what look like two "n"s or possibly n(y) after the first letter of the second name. The letter before rḥy is unclear even on the stone (MA p. 34) but what is visible looks like a l. In Arabic thr I Form means "become clean" in both a physical and a ritual sense (Lane 1886c) and ḡnm I Form of course means "obtain booty". I would take nqt as an adverbial accusative "(in the form of) a she-camel." The authors say that the letters were "scraped on a solid chalky stone with a smooth surface". On the photograph they certainly do not look "scraped" at least in the sense we are using the term.

Commentary:
The first letter cannot be a k as read by ed. pr. since there is no cross-stroke nor can it be a l since these are simple straight lines in this text while this letter has a small curve at the very top. B seems the most likely reading cf. the b of bn before \'{qrb. The third letter of the name is dearly a s² not \a f. The second letter of the second name is unclear on the photograph which is out-of-focus. The reading \h in ed.pr. is just possible has been retained faute de mieux.

URL: http://krc.orient.ox.ac.uk/ociana/corpus/pages/OCIANA_0017837.html
Commentary:
The edge of the stone at the point where the inscription begins has been obscured on the photograph and there may have been room for more than simply the lām auctoris to have been lost. It is uncertain on the photograph whether the second letter of the first name is a q or a w (cf the w's in line 4). There is a diagonal stroke at the top of the b of the first bn which makes it look like a k. On the photograph this looks deliberate hence the . The g of gmrʾl has a mark like a cross-stroke within it but this is clearly accidental. The s¹ in the name rḡs¹ could possibly be a ẓ though it is more likely a s¹ and is certainly not a m as read in the ed. pr. The expression wrd l- ʾgdʃ might also be interpreted "he came to water for easy living" (cf. Ar. giḍaf "a state of ease or plentifulness" Lane 2233/b) though one would expect h-ʾgdʃ in this context. The syntax is easier if ʾgdʃ is taken as a place name cf. Wādī al-Ghadaf south of Azraq (Map 1.50 000 sheet K.3353 II approximately 31° 46' N 36° 50' E according to the Official Standard Names Gazetteer). The ed. pr.'s interpretation of the statement is grammatically impossible. A 15 generation genealogy for ʾwḍ is very unusual. See C 2256 for one with the same last 5 generations.

Apparatus Criticus:
MA drʿ for dlʾ; nr for (n)r ʾm-----

Commentary:
Ed. pr. says that the rock is limestone but it looks more like basalt on the photograph. The second letter of the second name looks very like a land and is quite different from the ther of (n)r. Cf. SIT 32 where the second letter of the name is a clear l and quite different from b and r in the same text. The first n of nr ʾm is more of a large dot than a line and so the reading is not certain and the inscription clearly continues after the r of the name with a clear n.

Commentary:
There is a chip obscuring most of the second name. Only the beginning of the ʾṣ1 is visible the second letter has been destroyed and only part of the third letter remains. The third letter of the fourth name is more similar to the b's of the text than the s¹'s as suggested by the author's reading. It is also possible that the curve is an unfinished g or even n. The second letter of the first name after wgm might be a f but it would be a different shape from the other example of that letter in the text and it seems likely that the "middle stroke" is incidental and the letter should be read r. The second letter of the word after the fifth 'l- is more like a s¹ and the third letter could be a k rather than a h.

Apparatus Criticus:
MDT 2: l ḥlh bn (k)tn bn ms¹[k] p. 113: ltn for ktn.

Commentary:
The reading is very doubtful after the first name. The author has a dot for the first n but it is not legible on the photograph. The first letter of the second name appears to have a loop at one end and might be a ṣ or possibly a t. The crossbar of the following t could be part of a cartouche and it is possible the letter should be read as a n. The next letter is rather far away from the preceding one. There seems to be no justification from either the photograph or copy to restore a k in the third name.

Commentary:
The published photograph is not adequate to check the readings of all the letters. The n of the second bn has been left out in the copy. The first l of the fourth name is not legible in the photograph and in the copy it is drawn as a straight line without a hook. The second l appears to have a hook which is not drawn in the copy. The dotted n's suggest that the script might be Hismaic and it is possible the last letter should be read as a ṭ and the name ṭḥ read or possibly ṭḥ.

Commentary:

The inscription is written around the edge of the rock which is very damaged. The third ' in the author's transliteration is a mistake for y which is clear in the copy. The letters read by the author after the second z probably belong to another text which starts below the third m of MDT 4. MDT 7.1

-----{g}w nb

-----{g}w nb

Apparatus Criticus:
MDT 7: read as last part of MDT 7

Commentary:
There are traces of letters not read in the edition before the letter read as a g and then the rock is broken. It seems most likely that these letters are not part of MDT 7 but part of another text the beginning of which is lost. It is possible that the letter read as a g is an ʿ.

MDT 8

l ʾll bn ʾbn[-----]

By Tll son of ʾbn----

Apparatus Criticus:
MDT 8: l ʾll bn ʾbn

Commentary:
The ḥ read here is read in the edition as part of MDT 7 but the position and stance of the letter suggests that it belongs to this text which continues either on another face of the rock or on a piece of the rock that has broken off. The shape and stance of the second letter is more like a t than a ḥ. It is possible that the text is Hismaic as the n’s are dots and the ḥ is typical of that script.

Provenance:
Mafraq area, unspecified region, Jordan
[Latitude/Longitude: 32.190827 / 37.123804]

MDT 9

[---]m w nʾrt w ng{ʿ}

---m w nʾrt w ng{ʿ}

Apparatus Criticus:
MDT 9: --- mwng bnt ʿrnr

Commentary:
The above is read as Hismaic. It is difficult to see from the photograph the second n read by MDT as there appears to be only the crossbar of the following t in the arms of the r. There appears to be a n the shape of a dot after the second w. The final letter is read as an ʿ as the arms appear to be enclosed although this is not entirely certain from the photograph. It is difficult to justify the reading of a further n at the end although there is a small chip which might be a letter.

MDT 10

[----]t r[ty]

--- t and (he pastured)

Apparatus Criticus:
MDT 10: l wrn wt--- "By wrn wt---

Commentary:
MDT read the text in the opposite direction. After the w there are two slightly dotted chips and it is possible that one of them should be read as a n but equally they could both be incidental. The letter after the r has slight abrasions over the top and it is possible that it should be read as a w but it is slightly smaller than the first w. The letter read as a l by MDT has a slight fork at the edge and it seems likely that it is the beginning of the loop of a y that has broken off.

\end{align*}

Commentary:
The fourth surviving letter \( l \) seems to have been altered to read first \( y \), then \( ġ \), and then \( r \). Similarly, the following letter, \( n \), seems to have been transformed first into a \( ĝ \), then a \( r \) then a \( h \) and finally \( a ’ \). This is succeeded by a \( r \) and the next letter, \( l \) seems to have been modified to a \( d \) and then a \( z \); and the \( r + l \) were then altered to a \( s \) and finally a \( d \). The following \( d \) has been made into a \( q \), the following \( l \) into a \( h \) and then a \( r \). This is followed by \( y m n \) and then \( n \) which has been transformed into a \( ‘ \), and which has been transformed into a \( ġ \) and then with a \( ’ \) carved over it. This is followed by a \( r \) which has been made into a \( t \). After this the remaining letters appear to have been left as they were carved. Altogether, the original contained 29 letters comprising all the letters of the Safaitic alphabet except \( s \) and \( w \). It is therefore not an abecedary as such, but may have been an exercise. One might speculate that the alterations to the letters in the first half were made by someone trying to show the similarity in shape between various letters. The next letter might originally have been a \( l \) to which a hammered dot has been added at either end or a \( y \) to which one hammered dot has been added. If the latter is the case then the name would read \( m^{'}{y}l \). There is a further letter to the left of the \( t \) which might be a \( h \) and it is possible the inscription continues under an incrustation on the rock.

Some of the letters have been joined using lines. The initial \( l \) is attached to the \( m \) and a hammered line which obscures the following \( ' \) attaches the \( m \) to the \( l \). One arm of the first \( b \) has been extended and attached to the \( n \). One prong of the \( ' \) of the second name has been hammered over and the letter has been joined to the following \( d \) by further hammering. A horizontal line seems to have been attached to the second \( n \) in an attempt to join it to the previous \( b \) and there is hammering attaching it to the following \( s^{2} \). By 'fṣy son of s¹d son of S²rk son of Ḥb of the lineage of Qmr and he lay in wait with his paternal uncle {Ḍl} for ʾṯbr

Commentary:
A line has been hammered across the prong of the h of dd -h. After the second ḍ the author wrote a line with a small prong and then seems to have lightly scratched over it to change it into the third l. MKWS 8 is written by ḍl bn s²rk bn ṣbḥ who would presumably be the paternal uncle referred to. Ḥava: kamana "to lay hid"; Syr. kemen "lie in wait"; Aph. atbar "to rout" "for a rout" at the end?

l ʿṣ¹ḥr bn ʿḍ bn ʿḍ bn ʿṯry m- ṭ ṭ bn ṭ - h- dmyt w ṭ ṭ l- d ʿy)ˈ(w)r

By ʿṣ¹ḥr son of ʿḍ son of ʿḍ son of ʿṯr and he bought from ʿḍ son of (his) brother the drawing and (blindness) to whoever (scratches [it] out)

Commentary:
Mr. A 6 to 8 are on the same stone. This text is written in large incised letters under the drawing, up the right hand edge of the stone and along the right side of the top. In the sentence w sʾrḥ m- ṭ ṭ bn ṭ - h- dmyt it may seem unlikely that he bought the drawing FROM HIS NEPHEW. Littmann suggested that in LP 1166 dmyt might mean “a mare from Dūmā”, and certainly Ahmad Al-Jallad (following C.J. Robin) has suggested that in some inscriptions h-dmyt could be the nisbah for a man from the oasis of Dūmā (2015: 310). The problem with taking dmyt as “the mare from Dūmā” here is that the horse seems clearly to be a stallion, and unless one takes dmyt as referring to the animal being hunted — the sex of which is not shown — which seems unlikely, one has to fall back on the normal meaning of dmyt “drawing”, until another solution can be proposed.

The author has made two errors the g of grm'l has a tail and there is a l before the m of the third name which is probably the result of metathesis i.e. the author started to write lmk instead of mlk but realised his mistake in time to insert a second l in the correct position.

Apparatus Criticus:
MSFS 4: wrd ‘dyt h’wdy bn trd "he goes down to stagnating water of the Awđite pursued man stayed (there)"

Commentary:
The last letter is not completely clear on the photograph but looks more like a q than a d. For ‘dyt cf. Ar. adāh “a pool of stagnant water” (Groom Dictionary of Arabic topography 32). In view of the fact that it is followed by bn trq it is difficult to see how h-‘wdy could mean “the Awđite”. "The ‘wdite ibn ʾTrq” would normally be expressed as ‘bn trq ʾwdy. On the other hand H’wd is quite a common PN and it seems possible that h-‘wdy could also be used in this way. In what sense this pool was the H-‘wdy bn ʾTrq’s is not clear. It is unlikely to have been his personal private property and it is more likely that the pool was named after him because of some event there in which he was involved.

By ’n’m son of ʾt son of S²hm and he came to a watering place h- ‘dyt h- ‘wdy and so B’s’mn [grant] vengeance and security from S²ny

Apparatus Criticus:
MSNS 1: and he went down to the stagnating water of the people of the tribe ‘wd. O B’ls’smn [give] relief and peace from enemies MCAM: h-‘wdy is the nisbah of ‘wd and so means ‘the ‘wd-ite’ [singular]; it cannot be a construct as the first word has the definite article; if h-‘wdy is an adj. it needs to be explained why the words do not agree in gender. An explanation is needed for the occurrence of s²ny rather than s²n’.

Commentary:
The copy has a h after the letter ʾd despite the author’s reading. From the photograph however it seems likely that the letter should be read as a y.

l grml bn s¹d bn qhs² w bgy ḥ -h f lm yʾd f qṣf
By Grml son of S¹d son of Qhs² w bgy ḥ -h f lm yʾd f qṣf

Apparatus Criticus:
MSNSI MSNS 2: trans: “and he sought for his brother [but] he [his brother] didn’t return so he suffered became weak or angry with” MCAM: the particle lm is followed by the jussive (al-majz⁰m) and not the imperfect.

Commentary:
There is a short line next to the third l which might be a prong in which case the letter should be read as a h. On the whole however it does not appear to be attached to the vertical and is probably incidental.

By Mn't son of {H(hrt) son of Tm son of 'ys¹ son of {Gm(h)²} son of {G}s¹m of the lineage of {Byd} and he had been robbed and so 0 Ds²r [grant] booty

Commentary:
The script is mixed between Safaitic (see the form of g [if the reading is correct] ḍ, and the r of ds²r) and Hismaic (see the forms of d and ḍ). The word 'dy seems to have occurred only once before as a verb in SSWS 80 w mr b- ḍf 'dy h- 's'ḍ f ḥbl ḍb't. According to Lane (1977c), 'udiy̲a' 'alay-hi can mean "he had his property stolen" and while the phrase lacks the preposition here, it could have a similar meaning, which could be why he was praying for "booty".

By Wyb {son of} {Tq} and he rejoiced greatly

Commentary:
Carefully direct hammered. The b and n of bn are joined. For the meaning of mrḥ compare Classical Arabic mariha "he was very joyful and glad" (Lane 2704a).

Provenance:
East of the "Roman road" from al-Namārah to the Ruḥbah, Rif Dimashq, Syria
This is the only site along this track at which we found published inscriptions. Those we sampled here are from the group recorded by Dusaud & Macler (1901) between the debouchment of Wādī Gharz and al-Namārah (C 2265-2275, but note that 3265-3281 were also recorded on this journey). The "Roman road" would have been the most obvious and direct route between these two points, and the c. 4.5 km from where the road ends on the edge of the Ruḥbah to this site would have been the normal distance covered in the one hour it took them to get from the mouth of Wādī Gharz to the place where they copied the inscriptions. It is therefore possible that they came down this road. The only problem is that they say that the site is on the "right" of the track, whereas coming from the north it would be on the left. Either this is a simple slip, or they were riding parallel, and to the east, of the road. Two of the texts they recorded here (C 2274 and 2275) were also copied by Wetzstein, Waddington and Dunand. The last presumably supplied the provenance quoted in C "on the east side of the Roman road between al-Namārah and the Ruḥbah", since the Dunands must have been in the area at about the time Poidebard identified the road, which had first been noted by von Oppenheim (Poidebard 1928: 118–120, fig.1). Wetzstein gave the provenance as "on the way between al-ʿUdaysiyah and al-Namārah", to which C adds "not far from al-Namārah". It is therefore probable that Wetzstein would not have been travelling on the "Roman road" but on a track to the east of it, somewhere between it and the modern route between Zalaf and the Ruhbah water tower. This site is near where he would have had to turn south-west towards al-Namārah. The other texts Wetzstein copied on this journey are C 3223–3248, of which C 3244–3248 were recorded at Ishbikkat al-Namārah since they are identified with copies made at this place by Dussaud & Mascler (1901: 88).

By S¹krn son of Qdm of the lineage of S¹b and he raised the memorials to Cavalryman Grmʾlf and so O Lt [may he have] a successor
Commentary:
This text is incised and runs boustrophedon. The author omitted the sª of frs¹ but squeezed it in between the r and the next letter. This small site (NRW.D) seems to have been the grave or some form of memorial to frs¹ grm¹ since several texts there mention him. This would be the first time a "double name" of this sort had been found in Safaitic, and it is more likely that frs¹ here is a title (i.e. "cavalryman") thus "Cavalryman Grm¹". While, in this case, one might expect either *grm¹ h-frs¹ or "h-frs¹ grm¹", compare mlk 'grfš in Is.H 763 (=LP 1064+1065) as opposed to h-mlk grfš in KRS 1023, 1039 and Al-Namārah.H 91.

lʿmr bn kdd ʾl ḡmt w wgm ʿl- tm w ʿyḏ w ʿl- {k}d(d) bn -h w rģm mny

By ʿmr son of Kdd of the lineage of ḡmt and he grieved for Tm and for ʿyḏ and for {Kdd} and he was humbled by Fate

Apparatus Criticus:
NSR: Kdd for {Kdd} and ʾbh for bnh. HST p. 12: s²mt for ḡmt uncertain. ATNS 3: as NSR except there are misprints in the translation wa- should be attached as the ending to the first name and the tribal name ḡmt has been left out. Apparatus Criticus:
NSR: w dṭ for bn dṭṭ(n). JaS 48.2: bn dṭṭ for bn dṭṭ(n) and instead of w ḥḥṭ read ḥḥṭ “and (there was) a large crowd”.

Commentary:
The arms of the b after “bd have been joined to form a circle cf the joining of the l and h in the first name of NSR 6.2. The n of dṭṭ(n) is a dash but the other n’s of the text are dots. The line read as l by JaS in ḥḥṭ is extraneous.

Commentary:
If the third letter of the second name is a k it has a rather short vertical stroke. It is difficult to justify from the photograph the readings of any of the letters between the {k} and b of {b}ny. The final letter looks more like a y than a s².

l nhm bn nmr bn s¹{n}m w bny ‘l- ḡḥl (f) ʾ{rgm

By Nhm son of Nmr son of S¹{n}m and he built for ḡḥl and so he built a cairn

Apparatus Criticus:
NSR: ‘lm for s¹{n}m and gh{s²} h ṛgm for g + h + l {f} ʾ{rgm. JaS 51: s¹{nn}m for s¹{n}m; gh{s²} bn glm for g+ h + l {f} ʾ{rgm.

Commentary:
The g’s in this text are circles with an additional curve attached so that they look like unfinished w’s. The additional curve in the second g might have been added in order to join the letter to the following m. The additional curve in the first g however does not attach the letter to another one. The h of the name after ‘l is written above the the line of the text and was presumably added later by the inscriber of the text. Below it is a horizontal line which might have been the start of his initial attempt to add the letter which he abandoned because he thought there was not room to complete it.

Commentary:
Only parts of the reading can be checked from the photograph which is very dark and virtually illegible. The uncertainties in the SD reading reflect the quality of the photograph rather than what it is probably possible to read from the stone. The form of some of the letters in the last part of the text in the NSR and JaS copies suggest that their readings are not correct. In NSR the d in dṯ is of a radically different form to the other d’s in the text and in JaS the ḥ of ṣḥd is larger and more square than the other ḥ of the text. JaS is correct in reading further letters on the stone see NSR 11.2 and 11.3.

The interpretation of these letters is doubtful. The sign read as {ʿ} is interpreted by JaS as a sun with rays but it is more likely that the "rays" are abrasions made by direct hammering. By Mnʿm son of ḡNm son of Mnʿm and the chief of the ṭ Ybg took revenge on the ḫwl whilst they remained

Apparatus Criticus:
NSR: ṭṣṣ--حاض-- ṭ for ṭ{ʾ}l yḥbg ḫwl ḏɡnt. HST p. 9: w qṣṣ ṭṣṣ?--حاض for the last part. JaS 88: w qṣṣ ṭ ṭ ṭ ṭ ṭ ḫwl ḏɡnt. "And ṭ has narrated deceiving about the abundance of herbage. And Lt imprisonment". JMAA III p.113: read as JaS 88. H unp.: or --ḥ ḫwl-- for the last part.

Commentary:
The twenty third letter has been read by previous editors as ʾ. It is however clear from the photograph that the original letter was an ʾ and that the circle was added later. If it was added to change the letter into a ṣ then it was a strange way to make the alteration as a more usual form of the letter could have been produced by closing one of the forks of the ʾ. It is possible the circle is an ʾ which was missed out and added later or as has been read here that it is extraneous to the text. There are other letters written next to the letters of the text that are clearly not part of the text: a b written next to the m of the first name; two slightly wavy lines next to the n of ḡnm; two m’s in which the outlines are incomplete on either side of the sixteenth letter; possibly an incomplete ʾ next to the q and the first ʾ of qṣṣ; a q with a hooked line attached next to the l of ṭ and a n next to the second ḡ. Some of the letters have been embellished the circles of the y’s have been hammered in and the lines of the second t have been given hooks turning it into a swastika shape. There are also incised lines on the surface of a lighter patina some of which are wusªm. For ṭ cf. Arabic "ayr" - "lord chief" and for ḏɡnt cf. Arabic dajana bi-l-makān - "he remained dwelt in the place". The lineal name Ybg is new although it is attested as a personal name in WH 231.

It is unlikely that the letters ḥṣy are to be read at the end as suggested by H because of their position on the rock. By {s}’d son of ----

Apparatus Criticus:
NSR: l s’d bn ---

Commentary:
It is likely this is practice text or written by someone who was unfamiliar with the alphabet. There is a dot between the first and second letter but it is probably a stray hammer mark. The s’ is in the shape of a V facing vertically in which the two lines are incompetently joined. The d seems to have been formed by inscribing a vertical and a horizontal stroke first which have then been clumsily joined together to form a loop. There are three hammered dots below the bn and then some larger hammered marks which were probably an attempt to continue the text.

Commentary:
The ǧ is two concentric circles. It is difficult to tell without a context whether the letter after mn is a g or ʿ. It is smaller than the other g in the text about the same size as one of the ʿs and larger than the other one. Part of the following letter has chipped away and insufficient remains to be sure of how it should be read although either r or d as suggested by previous editors would be possible. If it was a r then the arms of the letter would almost be closed as is the case with other r in the text.

Commentary:
The only letter which is visible at the beginning is a f. The n of the first name after wgm is doubtful as it is inscribed in a different technique to other letters of the text. It is difficult to read any letters after the ' of the third name after wgm although it is possible that a w should be restored before 'l. The reading of {ḡ}{ṭ}fn{n} is extremely doubtful. {l}(n) S¹lm f bbs²'s'ry

Commentary:
The form of the (l)(n) read at the beginning are clear but it is not certain that they belong to the text as they are written to one side. Also if the first letter is a l it does not have a hook as does the l in s¹lm. The s² is a zig-zag and the r is distinguished from the b by being a small rounded curve. It is possible that y read at the end should be read at the of NSR 61.4. It is unlikely that the text is a continuation of either NSR 61.1 or NSR 61.2 as the letters are inscribed in a different technique to those of the other texts.

Commentary:
The arms of the (r) of the fourth name are joined at an acute angle and the letter is written on the edge of the rock. The stone is broken between the second w and the w of whd. If the break was there when the text was inscribed then the inscriber continued on another edge rather than turning towards the centre of the rock which he could have done. Commentary:
The first letter has a line joining the vertical stroke to form a \( \text{h} \). It is not a deep as the rest of the letter but is probably intentional. There is a chip in the rock after the \( \text{h} \) and it is possible that NSR and H are justified in reading a \( \text{n} \). The first \( s^2 \) is inscribed near the top of the stroke of the following \( \text{h} \). The ' of (') \( n \) is larger than the other ' of the text. It is possible it should be read as \( m \) although it is not as elongated as the other \( m \)'s. There is a chip between the \( n \) and \( d \) of ndm.

By Mtʾy son of Zdt (son of) Ṣʾrʾ and he stopped [there] and helped the goats give birth ----ṭṭ

Apparatus Criticus:
NSR: l mtʾ bn zdt bn Ṽḥk bn Ṣʾrʾ bn ḥlʾ w wld mʾzʾy ----ṭṭ; translated from w wld as: "wa-wallada ṭaḥaṭ miʿzʾæ". H unp.: l mtʾ bn Ṽḥ(b) bn Ṽḥ(b) bn sʾbʾ w ḥlʾ w wld [h] mʾzʾy --ṭṭ; the end is very doubtful.

Commentary:
There is a break in the rock and only part of the b of the second bn is legible and the n has completely disappeared. The b of Ṽḥ(b) is partly covered by abrasions and there is a gap caused by the break between the d of wld and the m of mʾzʾy it is possible that H is right to restore a h.

By ṭād son of (sʿdtty) he grieved for M—- and for his father (f)h—- ʾš-h ṭr —-

Commentary:
The ṭ is two concentric circles. There is a gap between the d and ṭ of the second name. The letters after the second m are on the edge of the rock only; a line with a circle is visible and it is impossible to check whether it is a y ẓ or ṭ. The letter after the h of ṧbḥ might be an f or an ṡ. It seems likely that NSR 73.3 which ends in ṭw shares the letters of this text from the g of wgm onwards.

Commentary:
Several letters of the text have been infilled and hammered over either by the author of the text or subsequently and the text is partly covered by abrasions. It is unlikely that the second letter is an ' as read by NSR but it could be a z as part of a cross-bar at the top of a horizontal stroke is visible. The second letter of the second name could be a r or a b it is slightly more square than the b's of the text. It is possible that bn has been left out between this name and 'bd. Part of the b of 'bd is destroyed by a chip and the d is written on its side. The following b is written right up against the g and no n is visible. If the third letter of gfft is to be read as f then it is facing in the other direction to the other f. The b of the following bn has been hammered over and its original shape is not visible. The line across the circle of the w of the last word is indistinct. Three dots are visible and there are possibly more which are not certain in the photograph.

Commentary:
The seventh name is difficult to explain but the{s²} and {s¹} are fairly clear. It is possible the last letter of the name is a k. The n in the ninth name is doubtful as it is very faint. After the bn following the name ds there is an . The letter and next part of the rock have been covered by incised lines as though an attempt has been made to cross-out a mistake. It is likely that the author started to write the thirteenth name and then remembered he had forgotten to write the name fhrn and so covered his mistake with lines and continued the text slightly to the side of the previous part. The first letter of the thirteenth name is slightly covered by hammer marks. There is a small curve to one side of the letter which does not seem to be attached. The {b} of the name appears to have a tail in some lights which probably led NSR to read ḥt lying on its side at this point. The ḥ is the circle of the letter read by NSR the {b} read here the fork and the two are joined by the apparent tail. The d is two concentric circles. Parts of the rock following it are covered by lichen and it unclear whether the rest of the letters are a continuation of this text or part of another one.

Commentary:
The second letter of the first name is damaged by abrasions but is possible to see traces of a vertical stroke and a cross-bar at the top suggesting the letter should be read as z. It is difficult to be certain as to whether the circle of the second letter of the second name has a line across it or a dot in the middle. If the latter is the case then the letter should be read as either a ʾ or d [REF]. The first letter of the fifth name does not have a central line between the two forks and it is possible that H is correct in reading the letter as ḥ. \(l\) ṭ---- m(ṣ)ry bn hyn bn wd bn ʿṣ² bn frhz w wgm 'l- 'n{m} [w] dt'

By Ṭ---- {Mṣry} son of Hyn son of Wd son of ʿṣ² son of Frhz and he grieved for {ʾnʿm} and he spent the season of the later rains

Apparatus Criticus:
NSR: l mṣry at the beginning; 'n{m w dt' for 'n'(m) [w] dt'. H unp.: 'n{w}[m] [w] dt' for 'n'm w dt'.

Commentary:
The reading of the l and ṭ is clear but there are then hammer marks which obscure the letters before the m. The fork of the ṣ is obscured by abrasions as are part of the m of 'n'm and the w before dt'.

By ʿqrb son of Thn' son of {Gmhr} (and) he grieved) for his mother and for Hnʾlh and for -------- (and) (for) ḥlf and for Tmd{s²}r

Apparatus Criticus:
NSR: g[s²]r for g[m]hr; w wgm for [w] w[g]m; w 'l repeated by mistake for -------- [w] [']l-. H unp.: the two pieces of the rock do not fit together and it is possible a part is missing. The second occurrence of w 'l after hnʾlh is doubtful and so is the f of ḥlf. The end reads tmd ᵇ's---

Commentary:
H is correct in pointing out that the two parts of the rock do not fit together. It is still possible that the second letter of third name is a m although it is impossible to be certain without knowing how the two bits of the rock actually join together. The first w and g of w wgm have been hammered over. After w 'l following hnʾlh there is definitely an ' and possibly a letter before it. The surface of the rock where there might have been further letters is hammered. On the adjoining piece of rock there are traces of what might be an ' before the l. It is possible that the letters read in NSR 95.2 are a continuation of this text.

---ṣ²dd {b}(n) ---
---ṣ²dd {son of} ---

Commentary:
The surface before (ṣ²) is covered by hammer marks. The letters that have been read as {b} and (n) are carelessly hammered compared to the other letters which are neatly inscribed. It is possible that this text should be read as a continuation of NSR 95.1.

1 --m{s²}t w s¹nn {w}----(b)lt w {z}by w ūwr w {z}mn w dt{'

By --m{s²}t w S¹nn {w}----(b)lt w {z}by w ūwr w {z}mn and (he spent the season of the later rains)

Apparatus Criticus:
NSR: w wd w lt w gry for (w)----(b)lt w {z}by; suggests that wd lt gry ūwr and perhaps s¹nn and hmn are names of deities. H unp.: the reading wd w lt is very doubtful; read zry for gry. The words after the author’s name are probably verbs.

Commentary:
The second letter and the surface between the final n of s¹nn and the letters lt are covered by lichen and it is difficult to distinguish anything. The fourth letter might be a f rather than s². In some lights the cross-bar of the letter read as {z} does not appear to be complete. The letters read as b are larger curves than that read as r. The latter might have a small tail in which case it should be read as a s¹. The letter read as z is a small curve with a vertical stance. There are possibly further letters on another part of the rock.

Commentary:
There is lichen and abrasions over the first part of the text and it is possible that ṣ should be read but nothing else is legible from the photograph. The ḡ of the second name is an unusual shape and different from the shape of the other ḡ in the text. A fork has been inscribed and then the third middle line has been attached to a line of the fork rather than to the centre. The n of the second bn is inscribed on the edge of another letter possibly a r in thicker chiselled lines which is followed by a ḡ. The different technique of inscribing and the portion of the n suggest that these letters are another text NSR 111.2 rather than a part of this one. QSZB 8: ḫšlh for ḥnʾḥ; ʿmr for tʾmr

Commentary:
The photograph is far from clear in places but the reading offered here seems plausible. Many of the letters have "square" forms. Where QSZB read ʿ there seems to be a clear ḫ, and they give no explanation of why, in the last name, they read ʿmr as a sign which in their tracing appears like a ḫ. In fact, there is not room for the sign in their tracing and ʿ can be seen clearly. The name ḥnʾḥ is found in Dadanitic (see HE 75 and Q$ un 3 and 5).

This text was not recorded by Dussaud and Mader and so not published in C, it was recorded by the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme in 1995. QWs 8 is at the top of the boulder and starts above the beginning of QWs 4. It is incised boustrophedon in small letters which, in places, do not show up clearly against the rock, making it difficult to obtain a coherent reading. It would be tempting to read the name following wḥbl ʾl as gnl, since this occurs at the top of the genealogies of both the Ḫf and Ṣf lineage groups. However, it is clear that the name is gll.

This text was not recorded by Dussaud and Mader and so not published in C, it was recorded by the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme in 1995. This text begins immediately to the right of 4. It is lightly incised and the letters are patinated to the same colour as the surrounding rock. In places it is difficult to make out. The corner of the rock-face has been chipped off. The same author gives the same genealogy in SESP S 1, where he includes the kn after sʾr which he omitted here, compare the same section of the Ḫf genealogy in KRS 2 58, 883, 1732, Is.Mu 121, etc.

Commentary:
C 4039–4042 (= QWs 13–15, 17) and QWs 16 are carved on a long low rock with a deep mauve shiny surface. QWs 16, which was not copied by Dussaud and Macler, runs downwards from the junction of the end of C 4039 and the beginning of C 4040 and then turns to the right to run horizontally along the bottom of the face before turning upwards again to end by the middle of C 4040. Most of it is barely visible on the photographs and a small part seems to have been lost in the area of the face which has disappeared.

Commentary:
The reading is from a hand-copy made by Dr Farouk Al-Rawī. The reading until the first ʿ is fairly certain but after the ʿ the copy is incomplete and it is doubtful whether the next part is a continuation of the same inscription or part of another one. The letter after the word dd has a loop at one end although it seems most likely that this belongs to another letter which would be a t. The letter before the second s² is doubtful and there is room after the letters bn for another letter although there is no indication of this on the copy. The eighth ʿ has a crossbar but it seems likely that it is an inaccurate copy. The second prong of the final name is uncertain and it is possible the letter is a h. It is uncertain that the last two letters should be read as rʾs.

The reading is from a hand-copy made by Dr Farouk Al-Rawi. The second letter is damaged and it is possible it should be read as a h. There is a dot in the copy after the first ṭ and it is possible that the name should be read as 'ntgt. By Ġṯ son of Ms¹k son of Ḥrg son of Ḥt and he bought the horse from mlk for twenty minas

Commentary:
The text is written in large incised letters around the drawing. There is a clear distinction between b and r in this text, except it seems the first word of the narrative which looks like s²by where the sense demands s²ry “he bought”. The only other record in the Safaitic graffiti of the purchase of a horse (this time for five minas) is C 3916.

Provenance:
Ruḡm Qaʿqūl A, Rif Dimašq, Syria
“Ruḡm Qaʿqūl A” is about 900 m to the south-east of the Ruḥbah water tower, on the right bank of Wādī Shām before it arrives in the Ruḥbah. It is a large cairn with a few ruined houses and very few inscriptions. The name “Ruḡm Qaʿqūl” was applied by nineteenth-century visitors to at least four large outcrops at the southern end of the Ruḥbah, to the south and south-west of the modern water tower. This helps to explain the curious fact that there is no overlapping between the “Ruḡm Qaʿqūl” copies of de Vogüé (de Vogüé 1866-1877: nos. 212–215, 217, 219–224, 226–234, 389) and Waddington (de Vogüé 1868-1877: nos. 235–253, 388, 390–393, 397–400), Wetzstein (1860: nos 41–48, and at “a mound 10 minutes from Ruḡm Qaʿqūl”, nos 68–88) and Dussaud/ Macler (1903: nos 30–51, 53–124), and only in a very few cases between those of de Vogüé and Waddington. This helps to explain the curious fact that there is no overlapping between the "Riǧm Ḍaʿqūl" copies of de Vogüé (de Vogüé 1868-1877: nos. 212-215, 217, 219-224, 226-234, 389) and Waddington (de Vogüé 1868-1877: nos. 235-253, 388, 390-393, 397-400), Wetzstein (1860: nos 68-88 and Dussaud/ Macler (1903: nos 30-51, 53-124), and only in a very few cases between those of de Vogüé and Waddington. We only identified the site visited by Wetzstein (Riǧm Ḍaʿqūl A) and by but have not yet found those where de Vogüé/Waddington and Dussaud/Macler worked. By Meṣk son of (ḥd) son of Sḥr son of Ḥd son of Mḥrbd of the lineage of (Frṭ) and he served [in an army unit] under the possessor of authority (the year) ḅḥṛ ṣml- lmsy with {ten} (archers) and with two hundred horsemen.

Commentary:
The text is carved in a semi-square version of the script around a small drawing. Parts of the text are badly abraded. The first Ḥd has a stray line, thicker than the letter, in the Ḥ, and a crescent, again in thicker lines, above the d. A second w was carved before sʾr but was then cancelled with three lines crossing it. The h-before sʾrān was originally carved as a ‘ and its lower fork was then scratched over. Unfortunately, the letters after bnh窟 are extremely difficult to interpret and it can be seen on the photographs that the letter which was read as k in our initial reading, followed by Al-Jallad (2015: 276), is of a completely different shape to the other examples in the text and both this letter and the one before it have been damaged. It should also be noted that Al-Jallad’s reading (2015: 276) omits the letters bṃy after the supposed ‘ml[k]. The expression sʾrā’t- occurs in two other Safaitic inscriptions, in one, KRS 1024, we find sʾrā’t- l-ḥr hdy which we have translated "he served {under} ḫr the commander", literally "he served, ḫr being commander", compare Arabic "alay-hi amr" "command lies upon him, he is in command" (Lane 2145a and see Macdonald 2014:160, n. 78). The other occurrence is in C 207 6: sʾrā’t- bḥdd ḩgr b- ḫl rgl w mʾt f ṭr[ s] the "he served in an army unit on [literally against] the borders of ḩgr with a thousand foot soldiers and a hundred horsemen" (see Macdonald 2014:160, n. 78). In the present text we follow Al-Jallad’s translation (2015: 149), rather than those proposed in Macdonald 2014:160, n. 78. The end of the inscription, b- {r}ʾ[ ṭ] ṭr ṭr[ ṭ] ṭr, appears clear despite the two damaged letters in sʾr. These were previously thought to be the letters ‘z and it was suggested that they may have been used as numbers (Al-Jallad 2015: 93–94). However, it now seems more likely that they are part of the word sʾrāt and that the r of the following word, rmʾn, assimilated to the [r] of sʾrā. Al-Jallad has explained rmʾn as derived from rmy "archers" or "lancers" (2015: 339). On mʾty see Al-Jallad 2015: 37.

Commentary:
See the commentary to 3. This text is lightly scratched and written boustrophedon. Note the curious form of the ḥ in Wḥs², which looks more like a ǧ. There is an extraneous scratch, which is lighter and thinner than the lines which make up the letters running from the ʾ of ṅgʾ across the g, making the ʾlook at first sight
In view of the gender of dll, bt presumably represents bayt "immediate family, tent-group" rather than bint "daughter". The passage dll mn- gm-h would seem to mean literally "lost from much of it", that is "much of which was lost". The passive participle dll is used in Safaitic both of those who are lost and of those who are dead and it is not possible in this context to say which is intended here. For gm compare Arabic ḡamm "many, much" (Lane 449a).

Provenance:
Riǧm Qaʿqūl D, Rif Dimašq, Syria

"Riǧm Qaʿqūl D" is a low outcrop with cairns and ruined structures about 100 metres south of the water tower at the Ruḥbā. None of the inscriptions found here had been published.
The name "Riǧm Qaʿqūl" was applied by nineteenth-century visitors to at least four large outcrops at the southern end of the Ruḥbah, to the south and south-west of the modern water tower. This helps to explain the curious fact that there is no overlapping between the "Riǧm Qaʿqūl" copies of de Vogüé (de Vogüé 1868-1877: nos. 212–215, 217, 219–224, 226–234, 389) and Waddington (de Vogüé 1868-1877: nos. 235–253, 388, 390–393, 397–400), Wetzstein (1860: nos 41–48, and at "a mound 10 minutes from Riǧm Qaʿqūl", nos 68–88) and Dussaud/Macler (1903: nos 30–51, 53–124), and only in a very few cases between those of de Vogüé and Waddington. We only identified the site visited by Wetzstein (Riǧm Qaʿqūl A) and by but have not yet found those where de Vogüé/Waddington and Dusaud/Macler worked.

But half way across the face it turns up and runs back to the right edge where it turns left and runs along the top of the face to the left edge where it turns down. The translation is that in Al-Jallad 2015: 276.

Provenance:
Riqm al-Ruṣay'î, Site 21, Al-Suwaydah, Syria
Site 21 is a large cairn with many inscriptions of which Littmann copied only 5. It is c. 1.75 km, as the crow flies, from Br'r al-Ruṣay'î, around which there are many cairns, and it is not clear why this one was given the name Riqm al-Ruṣay'î. The local Bedouin do not appear to know it as this today. Two texts from this site are clearly identifiable as LP 169 and 170 respectively, and another as LP 174, all from Riqm Ruṣay'î.
